Speaker Addresses Mycoplasma — 'Nemesis' Of Feeder Cattle Producers

MICHELLE KUNJAPPU

NEW HOLLAND (Lancaster Co.) — "The reason we put this meeting together is that we've all been dealing with this (mycoplasma) in one form or another for quite a while," said extension beef specialist John Comerford during a recent meeting at Yoder's Restaurant, New Holland.

Approximately 45 producers and industry representatives attended the informational meeting to hear Dr. Dee Griffin, beef production management veterinarian for the University of Nebraska.

Griffin, who has been a veterinarian for 27 years, has focused on feeder and stocker cattle during his career.

Although mycoplasma has been "a nemesis" for Griffin for years, it was this past year — when he discovered calves at a well-managed farm had a mycoplasma infection — that spurred his renewed research and efforts to understand the organism.

Mycoplasmas are slow-growing micro-organisms somewhere between a virus and bacteria. They lack the normal rigid cell wall of bacteria, instead having a coating similar to a "polysaccharide mucus," according to Griffin.

This casing allows mycoplasma to invade all the tissues and organs of the body.

Mycoplasma, though a hefty problem, is actually a fragile organism. It replicates only once every day or more, while "most bugs replicate in an hour," he said.

Additionally, cattle have to be exposed for 3-5 days to contract the disease, "because this is a pretty flimsy bug," he said.

There are seven groups of mycoplasmas that affect cattle, and "they don't all do the same thing," said Griffin. They may cause lesions, which cause airways to "get corroded so that air doesn't pass" as efficiently, according to Griffin.

The cost is that the calves do not gain as well. However, ultimately a feedlot animal's average daily gain over the last 28-day

LANCASTER (Lancaster Co.) — Agrifinance has been Darvin Boyd's career for 26 years. On Thursday, at the First Union Agrieducation Seminar at the Farm and Home Center, Boyd bid farewell to hundreds of people in attendance.

Boyd is retiring as senior vice-president and director of First Union National Bank on March 31.

"Boyd is much more than a banker," said Barry Shaw, bank board member president. "His positive attitude and enthusiasm has helped many of us through ag's (financial) cycles. He is a friend who has helped people well beyond banking duties."

Boyd has gained respect for his commitment to agriculture and for his encouragement to many, especially the youth.

Compared to Thursday, the bulk of the average Choice and Select steers sold fully steady. There was some weakness noted in the high Choice and Prime stock, as buyers never seemed to pour into the fancier-types. All of the cards were stacked in the sellers favor on Tuesday, as the Board closed at 81.65 for the February live cattle contract on Monday. Also, packers were definitely moving some boxes early in the week, as the boxed beef cutout was from around 1.50 to 1.80 higher on Monday. Even with the supportive factors, the early week runs failed to break steady. Bidding on the fed steer supply ranged from moderate to somewhat active at times; and was very dependant upon the quality and the fill. Holstein steers sold mostly steady on a fairly light test. Slaughter heifers were also in short supply and trended near steady. Breaking and Boning slaughter cows sold steady to instances weaker, with the Lean cow supply trending steady to firm. Buyer attendance was normal, with bidding lighter on the fleshy cows, and more active on the lean supply. It was very impressive that prices held steady when considering the run included 525 cows. Slaughter bulls sold steady on a light test. The supply included 29 percent steers, 8 percent heifers, 54 percent cows, 4 percent bulls, with the balance feeder cattle.

SLAUGHTER STEERS: High Choice and Prime 2-4 1270-1455 lbs 78.00-82.00, average 79.56. Choice 2-3 1095-1490 lbs 75.50-78.50, average 77.10, heavy 1500-1575 lbs 72.50-76.75, full and Yield Grade 4 72.50-76.75. Select and low Choice 2-3 1195-1450 lb 72.75-76.25, average 75.28, few high dressing up to 76.75, full 74.25. Few Select 1-2 1060 lbs 73.75.

HOLSTEIN STEERS: Few Prime 2-3 1430-1520 lbs 64.75-69.75, average 66.75, few up to 71.00 on Monday. Choice 2-3 1300-1510 lbs 59.25-63.25, average 62.32. Couple heavy Select and low Choice 1-3 1590-1620 lbs 57.75-58.75, average 58.25. Few Standard 1-2 returning to feed 1040-1190 lbs 40.00-45.50, average 43.67.

SLAUGHTER HEIFERS: One lot Prime 3 1350 lbs 77.25. Few Choice 2-3 1010- 1405 lbs 74.50-77.75, average 75.40. Select and low Choice 2-3 mostly Charolais and Limi-crosses 1055-1390 lbs 72.75-75.75, average 74.00. Few Select 1-2 1080-1365 lbs 68.00-72.50, average 71.31.

SLAUGHTER COWS: PERCENT LEAN WEIGHT BULK LOW DRESSING Breakers 75-80 Over 1400 lbs 42.50-48.00 38.00-41.75 Boners 80-85 Over 1200 lbs 37.50-42.25 35.75-37.75 Lean (Hi-Yield) 85-88 Over 1200 lbs 36.50-38.75 34.50-36.00 Lean 88-90 Over 1000 lbs 33.50-37.75 31.00-33.75 Lean (Light-Wt) 85-90 750-1000 lbs 30.50-33.75 25 00-30.75.

CALVES: Compared to last Tuesday, slaughter calves sold steady to 5.00 lower. Holstein bull calves going into veal barns sold weak to mostly sharply lower. However, remember there were only 425 calves in the entire sale last week, and when comparing the 1025 we saw this week it makes for a pretty light test. Holstein heifers sold weaker as well under the same circumstances. The supply included 753 in the state graded sale, with around 89 percent of the graded supply returning to feed.

SLAUGHTER CALVES: Standard and Utility 65-110 lbs 15.00-27.00, weaker 11.00-15.00. Compared to Tuesday, the bulk of the Select and Choice steers sold steady to firm; with the fancier high Choice and Prime steers trading up to a full 1.00 higher. Trade activity was very mixed throughout the sale on all grades, which also made for some wide price spreads within each grade (note the average prices for each grade in the prices quoted below). The Merc and the boxed trade have both been farmer-friendly all week. The February live cattle contract closed at 80.62 on Thursday which is down from the prior day but still somewhat supportive as the month comes to a close. Now all eyes turn to the April contract which does not provide as much support at its current level of 76.00, especially with the summer months trading in the mid to upper 60.00 range. However, we all know how quickly those levels can adjust to the cash trade. On the meat side, cutout values are currently from around 122.00-129.00; which is much higher than last week's values. Slaughter Holsteins sold steady to firm on a moderate supply. There were a few slaughter heifers on offer, but the finished was too mixed to compare to the early week run. Slaughter cows sold a full 1.00-1.50 higher on a very large run that included well over 550 head. There was an especially good supply of big fleshy cows (less than 85 percent lean) which drew very good buyer attention. The cow carcass cutout value was at 91.96 on Wednesday, which is 2.88 higher; and buyers made it clear on Thursday that their plants are moving meat as they added some money to their already high bids. The few slaughter bulls that were comparable to the light early week test sold a full 1.00 higher, with the rest of Thursday's run trending sharply higher. The reported supply included 43 percent steers, 6 percent heifers, 42 percent cows, 4 percent bulls, with the balance feeder cattle.

SLAUGHTER STEERS: High Choice and Prime 2-4 1125-1440 lbs 78.10-83.75, average 80.50, few scattered sales 76.50-78.00, Yield Grade 5 76.50-77.00. The OLD FARMER'S THIS WEEK WITH ALMANAC

MARCH 3–9, 2003

SHROVE TUESDAY, MARCH 4

BLOW ME OVER!

Here are a few surprising facts about wind Lest you think the March wind is all bluster, keep in mind that a winter's wind can exert up to 25 percent more force during the dense air of winter's cold than at other times when the air is less dense

The chinook winds of the American Northwest and Canada have been known to raise temperatures as much as 30°F in just three minutes! One late winter in Calgary, Alberta, the temperatures climbed from –14° to 76°F Now that's a warm breeze!

The wind in one's face makes one wise.

The OLD FARMER'S WEATHER PROVERBS

A veering wind will clear the sky A backing wind says storms are nigh

TIP OF THE WEEK

Try nonfat evaporated milk for mashing potatoes, or use a lowfat cottage cheese.

FETA RISOTTO

4 cups vegetable broth
3 cups chopped broccoli
1 small onion, chopped
1 tablespoon olive oil
1 teaspoon ground ginger
1 1/2 cups Arborio rice
juice of 1 lemon
1 cup crumbed feta cheese
1 tablespoon grated Parmesan

Bring the broth to a boil, add broccoli, and simmer until the broccoli is just tender In a saucepan, saute onions in olive oil, then add ginger and rice and stir to coat with oil Stir 1 cup of broth from the broccoli into the rice until broth is absorbed Gradually add remainder of broth and broccoli, cooking until the rice is just done, about 15 minutes Remove from heat, add lemon juice, feta and Parmesan, and serve immediately

Makes 4 servings, as a side dish.

OPINION

The Full Farmer

The English philosopher Sir Francis Bacon once noted, "Reading maketh a full man; conference a ready man; and writing an exact man."

In other words, if you want to know what you're talking about, you'd better be well read on the subject. And those that are well read can be counted on to know a bit about history and have the so-called "well of information" to prove it.

With that in mind, a couple of years ago we began a column entitled Farm Shelf, which pointed out good books for farmers to read and enjoy. The column continues to be a source of education and fun, especially to those of us who read and write about books of interest to farmers.

The Pennsylvania Newspaper Association Foundation, in a letter last month, noted that, in a joint program with the National Education Association, the Read Across America Program celebrates the joys of reading, and honors well-known children's author Dr. Seuss (Theodor Geisel) as well. Geisel's birthday is on March 2. The official Read Across America celebration is March 3, this coming Monday.

Read Across America is established to demonstrate the importance of reading. Reading is the essence of good writing and good business. The best farmers are also the most well read.

Farming should be a lifelong learning enterprise, and many good books have been written by and about farmers on the lifestyle and business choice that continues to change and grow.

Good books are our guides and inspiration. They convey the success and heartaches sometimes found in our industry. But they also pass along the wit and wisdom garnered from experience the farmers themselves share.

Let's make Read Across America Day this coming Monday an important one for our industry.

Editor:

It's unfortunate that Lancaster Farmer chose to bash "green banking" rather than welcome it. (Editorial, Feb. 15).

Green banking programs are offering new sources of reduced-cost credit to producers who meet certain environmental standards. What's so distasteful about that carrot? It surely beats a stick.

Over and over, I hear producers complain about escalating regulatory and consumer expectations, and ask who is going to help them pay for their increased costs.

When the community offers to help with these costs, whether through lower-cost credit, public funding for conservation programs, or market premiums for production systems like organic, and grass-based livestock, farmers need to pay attention.

Farmers already accept that they will be paid for production

To Upgrade Your Crop Insurance Coverage

This week, USDA Secretary Ann Veneman announced a very significant increase in the cost share for crop insurance premiums of up to 50 percent. The 2003 Targeted States Crop Insurance Financial Assistance Program will be available in 15 states. The eligible states are Connecticut, Delaware, Maine, Maryland, Massachusetts, Nevada, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New York, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, Utah, Vermont, West Virginia, and Wyoming.

The effect of this additional discount is that producers can often increase their level of coverage/protection two or three levels (that is, 65 percent up to 75 percent or 80 percent) for the same amount of net premium cost as they had initially budgeted.

This will benefit producers in two ways. First, they will have much more and better protection in the event of a crop loss. Second, if they have a good crop, they will add a nice premium credit to the premium account that will help reduce premium costs in the long run. With this additional support, producers are only paying about 20 cents per dollar of gross premium.

It is important to be aware, however, that the enrollment deadline is March 15. If you already have crop insurance, contact your agent promptly to upgrade your coverage if you are interested. If you do not have crop insurance, this additional support adds to the reasons why you should use this risk management tool. If you need help in finding your local crop insurance agents, contact your local Farm Service Agency office and they can supply you with a list of agents.

To Prune Backyard Fruit Trees

The winter wonderland around us makes it seem like spring is far away. But the calendar reminds us that a season change is near.

Dr. Tim Elkner, horticulture agent in Lancaster County, reminds us the end of winter is a good time to prune your fruit trees. The primary purpose of pruning young fruit trees is to develop a framework for maximum fruit production later in the tree's life. Once that's accomplished, pruning focuses on increasing light penetration into the tree, removing less productive wood, and maintaining the crown of the tree in an efficient, stable form.

There are two general types of pruning cuts employed: heading cuts, which are used to reduce or maintain tree size, and thinning cuts, which are used to remove entire branches. Visualize a tree as seen from above without its leaves. Branches radiate from the trunk much like the spokes of a wheel. To allow the sunlight needed for proper fruit development and coloration to enter the center of the tree and to make harvest easier, some of these "spokes" may need to be thinned out.

Consider these items as you work around the spokes or "scaffold" branches of a tree. First, remove suckers or watersprouts, which are those vigorous non-fruiting shoots that often appear at the base of grafted trees or in crotches and sites of previous pruning cuts. Then remove or head back to healthy side branches any stubs or broken branches that will invite insect and disease problems. Third, remove downward-growing branches since they develop few fruit buds and only serve to shade more productive branches. Next, head back or remove the less productive of two rubbing branches since rubbing injury invites problems. Finally, remove any interior branches that are of low productivity. These branches are also shading more productive branches below them.

Backyard fruit trees are rarely overpruned. The inexperienced backyard orchardist is often timid about making cuts. As long as pruning is not accomplished by topping or shearing the tree, it will almost always benefit the tree's growth and production.

A common question related to pruning is whether cuts made during pruning trees in the yard should be coated. Prior to the mid-1970s, it was standard practice to coat all pruning wounds with an asphalt-based paint or dressing. These materials have since fallen out of favor after research proved they do not prevent decay in wood and in some cases actually stall the wound response and protect wood-rotting fungi. In short, make the proper pruning cut and let the tree handle the rest.

To Be Counted In The U.S. Agricultural Census

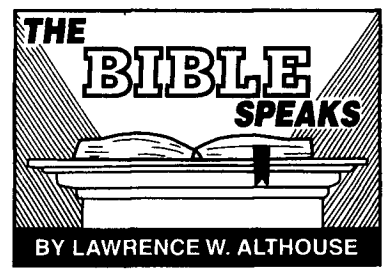
Thus far, reported numbers for the U.S. agricultural census shows returns are down in the Northeast. This is a problem because the census will direct how USDA resources are allocated and fewer farms mean fewer dollars for our region.

Report forms will be accepted through June 2003 as the USDA reviews and summarizes the data. If you are not counted, your industry will not be properly represented. If you still have your census form, fill it out and send it in. If you did not receive a Census report form, you can call (888) 424-7828 to get a copy. Your answers are completely confidential, exempt from disclosure under the Freedom of Information Act, and cannot be subpoenaed in a court of law.

Quote Of The Week:

"My great concern is not whether or not you have failed, but whether you are content with your failure."

— Abraham Lincoln



BY LAWRENCE W. ALTHOUSE

IMMEDIATELY!

Background Scripture:
Mark 1:1-45.
Devotional Reading:
Luke 4:14-21.

The New Testament scholar, Edgar J. Goodspeed, said that one should begin to read the Bible by reading first the Gospel of Mark and, second, reading Mark at one sitting. So often, we approach the Bible in bits and pieces and, valuable as that may be, we also lose something if we do not also get the big picture.

As another Bible scholar, Dwight E. Stevenson, puts it, "Mark is so simple that a child can understand it and so powerful that dictators cannot reckon with it; so brief that it can be read in the time required to glance through the evening newspaper, and so searching that a man will spend his whole life trying to live up to it."

If you read the Gospel of Mark from chapter one through 16, there is one word that appears 41 times, on the average of more than twice in each chapter. That word is "immediately," and it appears nine times in Mark 1 alone. ("Immediately" appears 14 times in Matthew, 12 times in Luke, and only twice in John.) This word is very characteristic in Mark, not only in his use of it, but in the general tone of the gospel itself. There is a continuing sense of immediacy.

Get Ready!

This is apparent in the very first three verses: "The beginning of the gospel of Jesus Christ, the Son of God. As it is written in Isaiah the prophet, 'Behold, I send my messenger before thy face, who shall prepare the way; the voice of one crying in the wilderness: Prepare the way of the Lord, make his paths straight.'" (Mk 1:1-3). Mark doesn't fool around, but gets right to the heart of the matter: get ready!

In 1961 there was a James Cagney film, "One, Two, Three!" The dialogue and action moved at an accelerated pace that left the viewers breathless. That's the way it is in Mark. He covers the baptism of Jesus in three verses and the temptation in the wilderness in one. And, when Jesus begins his ministry, it is with that same sense of crisis: "The time is fulfilled, and the kingdom of God is at hand; repent, and believe in the gospel" (1:14,15).

Why this breathless urgency? I think the reason is that Mark believes that the gospel message was urgent. Jesus is not someone people can sit and ponder endlessly. "The time is fulfilled, and the kingdom of heaven is at hand." No more waiting! It's is arriving now! If you want to be part of it, do not wait to make your commitment.

Who's Sorry Now?

Just as the timing is immediate in Mark, so the response sought is remarkably simple: "Repent, and believe in the gospel." To repent means more than being sorry for one's sins. The word in New Testament Greek is "metanoia," and it signifies a complete change of mind, a new direction of will, and an altered purpose in life. Repent is a call to transformation. There is no time in our lives when we are perfect, when we do not have good reason to repent and let our lives be transformed again!

The other challenge is to "believe in the gospel." This does not mean a mere mental acceptance of the good news, but a conviction so strong and commanding that we once again begin to be the persons Christ has called us to be. Someone has said that Christ became what we are, so that we might become what he is. So long as we have fallen short of the stature of Jesus Christ — and who hasn't? — there is a need for repentance and radical recommitment to the good news of Jesus Christ. Immediately! — not later.

When Jesus had gone into the synagogue in Capernaum and healed a "man with an unclean spirit," the spirit cried out, "What have you to do with us, Jesus of Nazareth? Have you come to destroy us? I know who you are, the Holy One of God." (1:23,24). Think of it, the evil spirits recognized Jesus as "The Holy One of God" and immediately they responded to him. Are we not to do the same?

"We would use slats again if doing it all over!"

Harold Keeney; David, Nancy & Mark Wolfskill

Our original plan was to install scrapers. But after 10 minutes in a slatted barn in Somerset County, we changed our minds. Some people stay away from slats because of the initial cost, but that extra cost is made up for in the first couple years.

The one thing I like the most about slats is that there is no expense. I don't have any scrapers or drive units to maintain. I don't have to run scrapers every day or haul manure like we did in our previous tie stall barn. The cows' foot health has been a lot better, and the cows stay much cleaner. Our milk production is up and the somatic cell count has gone down. I give at least some of the credit to the slats because with less moisture on the floor, there is less bacteria.

-David Wolfskill

East Fluid Milk And Cream Review

Madison, Wis.
February 26, 2003
Report Supplied by USDA

Spot prices of class II cream, dollars per lb butterfat: F.O.B. producing plants: Northeast: 1.2180-1.3195 Delivered Equivalent. Atlanta. 1.2180-1.3398 mostly 1.2383-1.2688.

PRICES OF CONDENSED SKIM, dollars per lb. wet solids, F.O.B. producing plants: Northeast: Class II, includes monthly formula prices: .9000-.9800; Class III - spot prices - .7200-.8400.

SPOT SHIPMENTS OF GRADE A MILK: FLORIDA· This week: In 0, Out 38; last week: In 0, Out 16; last year. In 0, Out 33. SOUTHEAST STATES: This week: In 0, Out 0; last week: In 0, Out 0; last year: In 0, Out 0

The base price for Class I milk for March 2003 is $9.81 per cwt., down $0.42 from February. A Class I differential specific to each pricing point (county) is added to the base price to determine the applicable Class I price. The Class II skim milk price for March is $6.74, down $0.16 from February.

Yet again, weather is the major story this week Rain, sleet, and snow are covering a large portion of the mid-South and Middle Atlantic areas. School and business closings are common in the urban areas, but travel in outlying areas is hampered by ice and snow covered roads Though not as bad as last week's storms, plant receipts and farm pick-ups were delayed in a large portion of the East. Bottled milk sales were good in most areas where forecasts of snow did cause some retail panic buying

Milk production is steady to slightly higher in the southern-most areas Florida's output is increasing slowly and handlers did have to move milk out of state for processing Some handlers in the Mid-South were busy with the logistics of milk movement in the storm- affected areas Surplus milk volumes are reported in the range of lighter to heavier this week Reports of a cheese plant shutting down two or three days this week because of the depressed price and demand for cheese pushed increased surplus milk volumes back to supplying plants Other plants have little or no receipts on some days and only moderate amounts on others. Milk from the parts of the Northeast has been and is clearing to Canadian cheese makers. This need for milk began to develop after the recent WTO ruling against Canada and its dairy product exporting programs. This milk moving north is helping ease processing schedules at some plants Reports indicate that Canada's need or desire for U.S milk will be ongoing

The condensed skim market is steady, but some plants did have more than desired. Demand was steady to slower. Reports of some distressed loads clearing to the Midwest were noted.

The fluid cream market is mixed, mostly weak. Offerings are heavy and spot demand is lackluster. A few spot loads were reported, but most deliveries were contractual. Excess volumes continue to move to local and Midwestern butter makers, but the actual number of loads shipped seem to be lighter than a few weeks ago. Cream prices are often lower. The multiples used to determine price are little changed this week, but the CME butter average decreased nearly five cents. Ice cream production is back to more normal levels after being disrupted by last week's storm. Cream cheese output is steady and also getting back to regular schedules. With the current, low price for butterfat, some users are building, as best they can, inventories of finished products. Churning activity remains heavy at those plants that are producing.

National Feeder Cattle Weekly Review

St. Joseph, Mo.
February 21, 2003
Report Supplied By USDA

NATIONAL FEEDER & STOCKER SUMMARY for week ending Feb. 21 — Total Receipts: 333,700; last week 300,100. Direct 46.100; last week 41.700. Video/Internet 38.000; last week 1,300. Auctions 249,600; last week 257,100. This week's reported auction volume included 53 percent over 600 lbs and 43 percent heifers.

Compared to last week, yearling feeder steers and heifers sold steady to 2.00 lower with the exception of the available lightweight yearlings weighing right around 600 lbs, which traded fully steady to slightly higher.These two-way cattle allow buyers the flexibility of going to graze-out wheat, short-term grass, or straight to the feedlot. Also, a six-weight feeder won't hit the finished market until fall, when most folks expect the fat market to rebound from summer lows. However, not everyone is sold on the idea that slaughter cattle prices are headed for the cellar.

Feedlots are getting downright cocky with their current marketing situation. Showlists have been green all winter and cattle performance has been out of this world, which has many cattle feeders believing that they can fight off this summers bearishness. August Live Cattle CME futures are trading in the 67.00 range, which would be a steep nosedive from this week's 80.00 market. The Board is definitely not helping the market for this year's wheat run, which started this week as salebarns in Texas, Oklahoma, and Kansas saw their first significant numbers of cattle coming off winter wheat pasture. Most of these feeders are fleshy and tipping the scales more than expected. Initial demand is only moderate for these types, but the interest in lightweight stockers is very good. Calf prices were steady to 2.00 higher on limited supplies.

Receipts in the Southeast continue to run well below normal and this was especially the case from Tennessee across to Virginia this week, where heavy snow brought livestock movement to a halt. This winters snowfall in the eastern regions of the US is approaching all-time record levels, while areas in the Midwest and Northern Plains continue to suffer in drought.

Weekly Dairy Market Outlook

Ken Bailey
Professor of Agricultural Economics, Dairy Marketing and Policy
Penn State

Feb. 21, 2003
BUTTER, CHEESE FALL BELOW SUPPORT

- Chicago butter falls to $1 per pound.
- Block cheese is $1.06 per pound.
- Global prices improve.

As if things could not get any better, Chicago prices for cheese and butter fell below support price levels. Block cheese fell from $1.08 per pound to $1.02 by week's end. The support price on blocks is $1.1314 per pound. Barrel cheese bounced around $1.04 per pound. That compares to a support price of $1.1014 per pound. But butter fell all the way to $1 per pound by Friday, a full nickel per pound below support.

What's going on here?

Part of this could be because of Monday's snowstorm that disrupted milk deliveries throughout the East Coast. In Pennsylvania, I could see many farms covered with 2-3 feet of snow. While the larger roads in Pennsylvania were kept open, many smaller roads were not passable until Tuesday. No doubt many farms had difficulty digging out, particularly in southeast Pennsylvania.

The same was true throughout the Northeast. Thus, the market is dealing with disruptions at many plant locations.

Traders in Chicago likely had orders to hold off on trades. Trading volumes this week at the Chicago Mercantile Exchange looked weak. Also, traders have a tendency to back off if prices are falling. This puts more downward pressure on the market.

One would expect market prices to move closer to support levels, particularly for butter. For the week Feb. 17-21, only butter from the West Coast made it into the dairy price support program. If butter from the Midwest makes its way into this program, expect Chicago prices to firm a few pennies a pound.

One thing on the plus side is that global prices are firming. A severe drought in Australia and level production in New Zealand is having an impact on dairy trade. Butter is 59 cents per pound in international markets. While that doesn't make U.S. dairy farmers particularly excited, prices seem better for nonfat dry milk.

At the present time, global powder prices are equal to West Coast prices (80 cents per pound). That makes it more likely the U.S. will begin to export commercially nonfat dry milk. This will help empty large government warehouses.

Cold storage report for the end of January indicates that butter inventories are up 104 percent over a year ago. American cheese inventories are up 11 percent, and total cheese inventory is up 9 percent. This had a depressing impact on dairy futures. September Class III futures are trading at $11.72 per CWT (Feb. 21), well below the high of $13.50 at the end of 2002.

Remember, these are averages, so you will need to adjust your figures up or down according to your location and the quality of your crop.

National Slaughter Cattle Weekly Review

Oklahoma City, Okla.
February 214, 2003
Report Supplied By USDA

NATIONAL SLAUGHTER CATTLE SUMMARY - Week Ending Feb. 21, 2003 - Slaughter cattle market 1.00-2.00 higher than bulk of last weeks meager trade. Trade turned active Thursday with showlists fairly well cleared during the days trade. Last week's blizzard on the east coast stifled movement of beef and packers responded with reduced slaughter. Retail pipelines must now be replenished and demand for beef is improving. Boxed beef prices down slightly for the week but late trade indicated improvement is forthcoming. Boxed beef prices Friday a.m. averaged 122.83 down 49 cents for the week. Sales of slaughter cattle on a national basis for negotiated cash trades totaled 178,900 through 10:00 a.m. Friday. Last week' s full count was light at 122,500.

Tennessee Feeder Cattle Weekly

Nashville, Tenn.
February 21, 2003
Report Supplied By USDA

Tennessee Feeder Cattle Weekly Summary — Receipts on 18 Tenn. Auctions: 8314; 18 auctions last week: 13,933; 16 auctions year ago: 13,175. Steers under 550 lbs mostly steady, over 550 lbs 1.00 to 3.00 lower. Heifers unevenly steady to 2.00 lower with weights over 600 lbs mostly 1.00-2.00 lower. Ample rainfall in the 6 to 7 inch range made movement of livestock from pasture to auction very difficult. At week's end another front was bringing even more rain into the state and forecast through the weekend. At this point auction receipts will continue light into next week. Certainly this week's light receipts made it difficult for buyers to assemble loads and at a few sales were numbers were relatively good, cattle traded at better levels.

Beef Ed Evening Reviews Accomplishments

DEANNA CUNFER
Carbon Co. Correspondent

After dinner provided by the members of the Bernville Grange, Cattlemen's Association President Robert Adam welcomed those present and provided information about the association activities. Presently there are 41 members families and seven junior members. Membership can be either for only the Berks/Southeast Cattlemen's Association or include membership in the Pennsylvania Cattlemen's Association.

Adams explained the association has two objectives—first is to promote beef demonstrated by their involvement in the Berks County Farm City Banquet, Open House at the Berks County Ag Center, their fall banquet and a recent tour of Excel (Taylor Packing). Their second objective is to help their youth by providing trophies and awards at various fairs and shows and sponsoring two or three youth each year to a beef camp in Virginia.

Each year during their Beef Ed Evening the association honors the youth beef winners in both market and breeding of surrounding counties. Those able to attend this year just happened to be the youth that exhibited the champion female for their county. The champion females for each were registered Herefords as well.

The Berks/Southeast Cattlemen's Association recently recognized the Champion Market and Breeding Beef winners at their annual Beef Educational Evening. Present this year, all exhibiting the champion breeding beef in their respective counties were, from left, Margeaux Firestine, Lebanon County; Daren Erb, Schuylkill County; Emilie Miller, Berks County, and Robert Adam, association president.

Representing Lebanon county was Margeaux Firestine, 17, daughter of Michael and Martine Firestine of Womelsdorf. Her bred-and-owned January 2001 heifer, MAP Miss Bella, was also named the champion female of the New York State Fair, champion Hereford at the Maryland State Fair, supreme champion of York Fair and reserve champion at Eastern Nationals. The dam of Firestine's champion female, also a bred-and-owned, had also gathered championship honors for her.

Firestine is a senior at Conrad Weiser High School and has been accepted to Loyola College in Baltimore, Md. where she will be a biology major in the pre-med program.

She has shown her Hereford cattle at approximately 13 shows this past year on the local, state, and national levels. She currently owns 15 of the 30-35 head on the farm—this total does not include the current crop of calves. Firestine had the honor of being named the National Polled Hereford Queen while in Denver, Colorado this past January while at the National Polled Hereford Show.

From Berks county the owner of the champion female, ECM 5F's Baby 110, a March 2001 bred-and-owned Hereford, was Emilie Miller, 17, daughter of Mike and Sheila Miller of Womelsdorf. Miller also had the reserve market steer project for Berks county. A senior at Tulpehocken High School she has been accepted at both Kansas and Oklahoma Universities in the honors program. Her major will lead her to a masters degree in Genetic Engineering.

This being Miller's last year of 4-H showing she regularly exhibits her animals at shows throughout the country and was recently elected to the National Hereford Junior Board of Directors.

Present to represent Schuylkill county was Daren Erb, 18, son of Kevin and Tina Brown of Pine Grove. A junior at Pine Grove High School he is the owner of MAP Miss Annie, a February 2000 Hereford female that was named the champion female in his county. Erb owns approximately 24 cross-bred and registered head. His champion female originated from the herd of Firestine at MAP Farms.

Winners of the champion market steer or market steer project for the respective counties were: Schuylkill County, Paul Shealer; Lebanon County, Tracy Gray; and Berks County, Kristy Dietrich.

Glyphomax Plus – the Alternative to Roundup

When it comes to preplant burndowns or applications in Roundup Ready soybeans or corn you'll find that all leading glyphosate herbicides offer the same effective burndown control of more than 100 grasses and broadleaf weeds.

But while the manufacturers of Roundup UltraMax herbicide would like you to think their product outperforms all imitators, the fact is it's hard to tell the difference between glyphosate offerings.

For example, both Glyphomax® Plus herbicide and Roundup UltraMax

- Contain the same active ingredient (glyphosate acid isopropylamine salt)
- Use nearly the same robust surfactant package (ethoxylated tallowamine)
- Control weeds equally with the same degree of crop safety, according to university and industry data as well as grower survey responses.

In fact, the manufacturers of Roundup UltraMax would never have licensed the use of Glyphomax Plus on Roundup Ready crops if they had any doubts about its performance and crop safety.

Since Glyphomax Plus and Roundup Ultra are created equal, here are reasons why you should consider switching to Glyphomax Plus this year.

When you use Glyphomax Plus you get the support of Dow AgroSciences, a major crop protection company with the best service policy in the industry.

And Glyphomax Plus is just one tool in the most complete corn and soybean portfolio in the industry. Our product line includes grass and broadleaf herbicides for corn, residual herbicides for soybeans, soil and foliar-applied insecticides and – one thing the competition doesn't have – a nitrogen (N) stabilizer that keeps more N available to your corn and less N available to leaching into the environment.

For more information about Glyphomax Plus and Dow AgroSciences complete crop protection portfolio see your local ag retailer.

PREGNANT MARE MANAGEMENT

Fredrick Hofsaess, Ph.D.
Professor of Animal Science

As we look forward to pastures turning green in the coming days of spring, it is also the time for mares to foal. Here are a few suggestions in the waning days of winter to prepare for the "big" day.

Pregnant mares should be gaining weight in the last three or four months of pregnancy. Depending on the size of the mare, a 150-200 pound gain in body weight may be desired just to counteract the weight of the foal, fluids and placenta.

Adjust energy and protein intake to allow for adequate condition. Mares, which are in poor condition at foaling, will not likely improve during lactation; which is nutritionally more demanding.

Pregnant mare should have been vaccinated for Rhinopneumonitis during the fifth, seventh, and ninth months of pregnancy. If they have not, vaccinate for Rhino at least once along with Tetanus, Flu, and perhaps Encephalomyelitis and West Nile.

Vaccinating six to eight weeks before expected foaling will allow adequate time for the mare to produce antibodies, which should be passed to the foal through the colostrum. Maintain a frequent deworming schedule to reduce the transfer of parasites to the foal after birth. Check dewormer labels for the safety of individual products for use on pregnant mares.

Exercise is an important consideration. Provide adequate exercise/ turnout for late pregnant mares, as exercise will reduce stocking up and the abdominal edema that frequently occur in late pregnancy.

If mares have been in run-outs, move them to the foaling area several weeks before expected foaling, if possible. By moving to the foaling barn, mares will become more relaxed in this new environment and sufficient time will be provided for immunity to develop against the many common organisms found in this environment.

Check the foaling area for protruding nails and other objects that may result in injury to the mare or foal.

Stock up on supplies which may be needed at foaling. Include clean straw bedding, and mild iodine for the umbilical stump.

If you are not familiar with foaling mares, contact your veterinarian ahead of time for advice and read up on the normal progress of mares in late pregnancy. Several good videotapes are available on the topic.

Preparation is key to successful foaling. Start evaluating the progress a mare is making toward foaling well in advance. Some mares "follow the book" and start developing an udder, and undergoing other pre-foaling changes several weeks ahead of the actual foaling while others do not.

With good pregnant mare management, you will help keep your mare healthy and safe and have a welcome addition to your stable.

Ag Technology Program Part Of Conservation Conference

COLUMBUS, Ohio — With agricultural technology changing the way business is conducted, growers and industry professionals are learning to use such materials to improve communication and develop more efficient record keeping.

An Ohio Agricultural Technology Association (OATA) Program will be offered at the Conservation Tillage and Technology Conference to help broaden the knowledge and use of how technology, like hand-held computers, software packages and broad-band Internet, can improve business with clients and co-workers.

The conference will take place March 3-4 at the Ohio Northern University MacIntosh Center in Ada, Ohio. The OATA Program is scheduled for March 3 from 2 p.m. to 5 p.m.

"We decided to bring something new and different to the table this year about communication and record keeping technologies for today's agriculture," said Nathan Watermeier, an Ohio State University Extension Technology Program Leader. "The program features educational sessions regarding issues that a lot of growers, researchers, and industry professionals deal with on a day-to-day basis."

The half-day program will kick off with a presentation by Grant Mangold, an agricultural communications consultant. He was also the senior technology editor of @gInnovator, an online news source about information technologies in agriculture.

Other program highlights include 30-minute sessions on hand-held equipment that can be used in the field then applied to software back at home or the office; broad-band and how growers and agri-businesses can use the Internet or wireless services; and bar-coding and location verification technologies for fertilizer, pesticide or manure applications that are used in specialty crop production.

The Conservation Tillage and Technology Conference is designed to bring together speakers from land-grant universities, the farming sector and agricultural industries and organizations to discuss a wide range of topics including agriculture-related panel discussions, precision agriculture, soil fertility, water quality, insect and disease management, strip-till research, value-added farming, crop management and producer programs.

The tillage conference is being sponsored by Ohio State University Extension, Northwest Ohio Soil and Water Conservation Districts, United States Department of Agriculture Natural Resources Conservation Service, USDA Farm Service Agency and the Ohio No-Till Council.

Registration after Feb. 24 is $30 a day or $40 for both days. For a copy of the agenda, registration information, or directions to contact the Hancock County Ohio State Extension office at (419) 422-3851 or the Allen County Soil and Water Conservation District at (419) 223-0040.

Stierwalt To Conduct Show Clinic In Delaware

HARRINGTON, Del. — Every year during March, the cattle show season begins with the spring clip, halter breaking or retraining of your show cattle.

As a fundraiser for the upcoming 2004 AIJCA (American-International Junior Charolais Association), the junior members of the Colonial Charolais Association have invited Kirk Stierwalt of Stierwalt Show Cattle to conduct his nationally acclaimed show and grooming clinic.

The clinic will be conducted March 28, 29, and 30 on the Delaware State Fairgrounds, Harrington, Del.

Stierwalt is well known on the national show circuit and has spent many years teaching showmanship and grooming on his ranch and has recently taken his clinic on the road.

Tips on clipping, hoof trimming, show day dressing, showmanship, feeding, and general care will be part of this three day clinic.

Participants bring their own cattle so they will gain hands on experience and confidence with the heifer or steer they will be showing.

The clinic has a 20 person limit. The cost of the clinic is $350 with a $175 deposit that is due with the registration form. The remaining balance is due upon arrival at the clinic.

Each participant will receive grooming supplies, a T-shirt, and meals while they are at the clinic.

All proceeds from the clinic will go toward hosting the AIJCA 2004 Show and Conference being held in Timonium, Md.

To register, please contact Lisa Dunaway at (302) 734-7726, or download the registration form from http/www.persistencefarm.com.

Cattle Producers Call For Permanent Repeal Of Death Tax

WASHINGTON, D.C. — U.S. cattle producers continue to urge the importance of permanent repeal of the Death Tax.

In the House, the Death Tax Permanency Act of 2003, (H.R.57), which calls for permanent repeal, was introduced recently by Rep. Jennifer Dunn (WA-8).

The bill was referred to the House Committee on Ways and Means. So far, 131 members are now cosponsors of the bill. Similar legislation in the Senate, Permanent Death Tax Repeal Act of 2003 (S.169), was introduced by Sen. John Kyl (AZ) and has been referred to the Committee on Finance. "With 131 co-sponsors, and more signing on all the time, we are looking forward to a vote on this legislation in the House, as well as in the Senate," says Jay Truitt, executive director of legislative affairs for the National Cattlemen's Beef Association (NCBA).

Survey Will Measure Farm Financial Health

HARRISBURG (Dauphin Co.) — Farmers of Pennsylvania will have the chance to help farm organizations, agribusiness, and Congress in evaluating financial performance of farm or ranch businesses by participating in the 2002 Agricultural Resource Management Survey.

This survey provides vital statistics about the economic condition of production agriculture. These statistics will also help the agriculture community and Congress make policy decisions affecting agriculture.

Data collected will present the only objective, true picture of the financial well-being of farm operators in the U.S. and is used in developing legislation such as the 2002 Farm Bill. These data are also a resource when policymakers determine Federal assistance. In 2001, direct government payments totaled $103.6 million for Pennsylvania and $20.2 billion for the U.S., down 12 percent from the previous year.

Approximately 375 Pennsylvania agricultural producers have been chosen to participate in these surveys. Participation in this survey is a very important contribution to the overall welfare of Pennsylvania's farmers. All individual data collected are held strictly confidential by law (Title 7, U.S. Code). Only statistical totals are published for selected geographic regions and the Nation.

Producers chosen to participate in the 2002 Agricultural Resource Management Study will be visited by an interviewer between February and April to complete the report at the farm operator's convenience.

Results from these surveys will be used by farm and ranch operators, farm organizations, commodity groups, lenders, university researchers, news media, local USDA agencies, farm suppliers, and others to compute prices paid, evaluate economic challenges facing America's food and fiber producers, determine the need for farm assistance, measure the cost of agricultural production, and assess the ability for producers to maintain sustainable farms.

"Farm Production Expenditures" will be released July 17. For a copy of the finished report or to obtain other agricultural statistics, visit the Pennsylvania Agricultural Statistics Service Website at www.usda.gov/nass/.

Mycoplasma, Feeder Cattle

period "will be the same as his buddies," he said.

Catching up, though, comes at a cost, as feeders suffering from mycoplasma infection may lose 50 marbling points at the packing house.

"That's half a grade," said Griffin.

"It doesn't just affect lungs. We also know it affects joints, and in a cow herd we know it causes mastitis," he said.

Difficulties with mycoplasma are "not an uncommon problem in well-managed cattle." Therefore "I think we must assume that are cattle are exposed through their mother's milk or from being commingled in the feedyard," he said.

Additionally, "We almost always see associated diseases" such as coccidia colitis, renal congestion, liver zonal congestion, or central nervous system (CNS) congestion.

Most producers follow the "seek and treat" method of ferreting out illness in cattle. However even experienced eyes can miss calves that are running a temperature or are in the beginning stages of mycoplasma infection.

The problem may be more widespread. "Day in and day out, we see those lesions," he said. "They are in 30 percent of the cattle we look at.

"It's a significant problem from a performance standpoint because the cattle don't do well."

Respiratory disease was found in 72 percent of sick cattle, which created scarring in their lungs. In addition, in Griffin's observances in the packing house, 58 percent of cattle not identified as sick also had lesions in their lung.

At far right Dr. Dee Griffin, beef production management veterinarian at the University of Nebraska, shares his knowledge of mycoplasma with producers at a recent meeting.

With prevention, "isolation is a big deal," he said. He further recommended vaccinating at four weeks with all vaccines boosted before the calves leave the farm. Griffin does not use a killed vaccine.

He also was a proponent of keeping movement to a minimum, advising producers to "minimize hospital commingling" at the feedlot.

"It's best if the cattle were never removed from their home pen to be treated. At the very least, treat using a multiple-day antibiotic and return the animal to the home pen without commingling with other cattle," he said.

As for vaccine, "our best information says that the vaccine response takes four weeks, and that just doesn't seem like a reasonable option," he said.

Mass medicating the animals off the truck, through injection or feed, may be costly but does result in mycoplasm-free animals. "Sometimes the value doesn't pay for the cost, but I've never had a truck (of cattle) go bad," said Griffin. "The number one dilemma is to figure out who is at risk, but the good side is that if you are really paying attention, you might have a little time" to pick up on the infection early.

"It's tough on a pen basis. We're talking about really having to pay attention. Your real issue is going to be in that first three weeks in which the problem starts," he said.

Intake decrease could be the first indicator of a problem, he said.

Recognizing mycoplasmas in the early stages yields good response to therapy, "but don't let them get lost in the pen" and stop treatment, he said.

If a producer catches a mycoplasma infection early, they may need to mass medicate through the feed, because earlier on may be the time of most rapid dissemination, according to Griffin.

"The bottom line is, I think you have to assume that there is a pretty high carrier rate. Your best shot is to isolate," he said.

"The way I'm looking at cattle is, 'I don't care where you're from or how good you're backgrounded, you may have it,'" he said.

Deadline For Spring Planted Crop Insurance Sign-up Mar. 15

HARRISBURG (Dauphin Co.) — Agriculture Secretary Designee Dennis C. Wolff announced that Pennsylvania farmers and growers should review their crop insurance needs and enroll their spring crops in the 2003 Crop Insurance Program.

"Pennsylvania is a leading state in crop insurance and risk management," said Acting Secretary Wolff. "With the uncertainty about the weather and market risks, crop insurance provides a way for Pennsylvania farmers to help manage their risk."

The deadline to enroll spring planted crops for 2003 and to change producer's current coverage is March 15, 2003.

The Pennsylvania Crop Insurance Assistance Program administered by the Pennsylvania Department of Agriculture (PDA) has helped to double participation in crop insurance, which is now well over one million acres the highest ever in Pennsylvania. In part, the increased participation has resulted from the PDA's insistence that the crop insurance program be made more reflective of Pennsylvania agriculture.

To be eligible, you must purchase a crop insurance policy and complete the required forms. The Pennsylvania Crop Insurance Assistance Program covers the administrative fees of $100 per crop enrolled for "CAT" and $30 per crop for Buy-up coverage.

Additionally, producers that purchase Multi-Peril Crop Insurance (MPCI) policies benefit by the state paying up to 10 percent of the gross premium, which calculates to about a 20 percent net premium discount. This program is in addition to any federal premium assistance. These benefits are automatic when producers enroll in crop insurance.

To emphasize the importance of risk management, the Department of Agriculture is working with the agribusiness community, Penn State Cooperative Extension, and the USDA Risk Management Agency to conduct over 90 outreach meetings in 2002-03 to assist over 4,000 farmers in exploring their risk management needs prior to the spring planting season. Crop insurance participation among Pennsylvania farmers increased 19 percent from 2001 to 2002.

To expand coverage to more eligible acres and crops, the PDA has worked with crop insurance companies and the Federal Crop Insurance Corporation to increase the availability of existing policies and develop more effective policy provisions such as Adjusted Gross Revenue-Lite (AGR-Lite) and Adjusted Gross Revenue (AGR).

Due to Pennsylvania's crop insurance success story, the PDA is assisting other Mid-Atlantic states in organizing a more efficient crop insurance program for their respective states.

For additional information regarding the Pennsylvania Crop Insurance Assistance Program, contact the PDA at (717) 787-2376 or the PA PowerPort at www.state.pa.us, PA Keyword: "agriculture." Check with your local crop insurance agent regarding your specific crop insurance policy requirements. A list of agents can be obtained at www.rma.usda.gov.

LOL: Culture Of Accountability Required

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn. — Setting the tone for the 82nd Land O'Lakes Annual Meeting, Board Chairman Jim Fife reflected on the past, described the current climate of agribusiness, and addressed Land O'Lakes' "culture of accountability."

"Let me tell you why our culture of accountability will sustain us," Fife said, building on the meeting's "People, Principles, Performance" theme. "The management is accountable to the board, the board is accountable to the membership, and the membership is accountable to be involved in its cooperative."

Fife explained management is accountable to the board, which carefully monitors business performance, direction and focus, and works with management to develop critical strategies for the system as a whole. The board is accountable to members, as their elected representatives, to preserve, protect, and grow member equity in the cooperative.

"We are your elected representatives," Fife said. "We represent you. You ultimately control the direction of your co-op. And that is why you are accountable to Land O'Lakes to be involved."

Fife said cooperative boards often bring unique insight to their responsibilities.

"The Land O'Lakes Board of Directors is different than other boards because we are a reflection of you, the members," Fife said. "Unlike directors at other companies, who oftentimes are not experts, nor even involved in the industries they serve, your directors are active participants in our industry. Your board understands agriculture and agribusiness.

"Our system of governance, and tiers of accountability, also set us apart from those business-as-usual corporations. It is member involvement that ultimately sets the direction, and makes cooperatives the grassroots, democratic organizations that they are," Fife said.

The Land O'Lakes Board is focused on the future of its cooperative system and in doing what it takes to achieve solid business performance such as managing its business portfolio deciding on appropriate strategic growth opportunities, and maintaining a strong commitment to Land O'Lakes cooperative principles and mission, Fife said.

SRBC Sets Public Meeting On Water Budget Study For Northern Lancaster County

HARRISBURG (Dauphin Co.) — The Susquehanna River Basin Commission (SRBC) has notified northern Lancaster County community officials, citizen groups, and others of the first public meeting on the development of a water budget and resource protection plan for the area. The purpose of the water budget study is to determine if the area's water supplies are adequate to meet current and projected water demands. The public meeting will take place March 27 at the Ephrata Public Library, Ephrata. To accommodate schedules, two identical sessions are being offered on March 27—an afternoon session from 12:45 to 3 p.m. and an evening session from 5:45 to 8 p.m. Interested parties are to RSVP by March 12 to SRBC.

The water budget study and resource protection plan, which is being funded largely by a grant from the Pennsylvania Department of Environmental Protection (DEP) Growing Greener Program, is a partnership effort of SRBC, DEP, Lancaster County Conservation District, and the Delaware River Basin Commission. The study area covers six watersheds in northern Lancaster County: Cocalico Creek, Indian Run, Middle Creek, Hammer Creek, Lititz Run, and Chiques Creek. The following townships and boroughs are located entirely or in portions of the six watersheds: Akron, Clay, East Cocalico, Denver, Elizabeth, Ephrata, Lititz, Manheim, Penn, Rapho, Warwick, and West Cocalico.

SRBC Executive Director Paul Swartz said that a water budget study is essentially like assessing a financial account, where you determine how much water is being deposited in an area and how much is being withdrawn.

"By calculating the area's surface- and ground-water sources and quantities and comparing that to the storage capacity and the water uses, we will be able to determine if the water supplies for this northern Lancaster County area are adequate to meet the demands," said Swartz. "As in financial accounting, water budgeting is an important first step that allows for the planning and management of water resources in a sustainable manner."

Swartz said, "The study partners are conducting this initial public meeting to explain the water budget study and discuss issues concerning water use, supply, and impacts on groundwater supplies."

We also will explain the purposes and benefits of a resource protection plan, as well as seek volunteers who may want to serve on a local advisory committee to help guide the water budget and resource protection plan processes," said Swartz. "At the end of this water budget study and resource protection plan, local government officials will have the information necessary to properly plan for the area's growth consistent with available water resources."

Ag Teacher Honored

LEBANON (Lebanon Co.) — Stephen Miller, a teacher at Conrad Weiser High School, was honored recently at the Lebanon Valley Farmers Bank/Fulton Bank's 24th Annual Agriculture Seminar.

The vocational-agriculture teacher was recognized for his dedication to the agricultural community.

He is very active in the Future Farmers of America (FFA) program where his students have learned confidence through public speaking, judging programs and interviewing.

Through his mentoring, several are accomplished veterinarians, biologists and scientists.

Major universities recognize Miller's program at Conrad Weiser High School as an exceptional one. Miller accepted the award in the presence of 550 attendees.

THE CHAMBER'S AGRICULTURE SERVICES PROGRAM OF ACTION

As a member of our local agriculture community, you are most likely aware of some of the various ag-related activities initiated by The Lancaster Chamber throughout the year. The activities of the Agriculture Services Program are directed by The Chamber's Agriculture Committee. The foundation for these efforts are The Chamber's three goals - member services, advocacy, and community leadership. How do these goals shape the initiatives you hear about throughout the year? Read on to learn more.

As a member of The Chamber, what member services are available to enhance your agri-business? The agricultural program provides many member benefits from educational opportunities to enhance your business skills to various networking events. The Chamber offers a discounted membership rate for farmers, which may be an additional incentive.

The Lancaster Chamber is one of the only chambers in the country to employ a full-time agriculture services staff person. There is an annual farm business symposium focused for the more progressive farmers, which offers a reduced rate for members. There is also an annual agriculture industry banquet which draws more than 700 people from the ag industry. This event offers a reduced rate for members and provides a celebration for the ag industry, a featured keynote speaker, and many networking opportunities. Another membership benefit is a speaker's bureau which is available on various topics in agriculture.

When looking at The Chamber's second goal, advocacy, we have several initiatives and projects to meet this goal. To provide a better understanding of the farming community, we have planned a new legislative farm tour for Lancaster County officials. The ag program is also looking to hold an educational event for township officials and develop correspondence with townships on agricultural issues in an effort to bridge the understanding of farming. The Chamber will lobby and take positions on key issues of interest to agriculture as recommended by the Ag Committee. Communication is essential in The Chamber's efforts to advocate for a healthy business and agriculture environment. It is important that our members bring to our attention challenges they are facing so we can assist to what ever degree possible.

The Chamber's third goal, community leadership, relates to many of the overall goals of the agriculture program. In its awareness building activities, our agriculture program demonstrates its leadership role in the community. One particular event that speaks greatly to community leadership is Family Farm Days. This annual three- day event, planned this year on June 17-19, provides a free educational and fun family event on a modern dairy farm. The typical attendance is more than 10,000 people, all of whom receive a personal tour of the farm operation and enjoy many of the aspects of the farm. Another aspect of community leadership is the voice The Chamber provides to the public about the importance of agriculture and more specifically the benefits that agriculture plays to our community. To build community understanding of our industry's significance, The Chamber developed a Lancaster County Farming Facts brochure which provides a clear illustration and is available free at The Chamber.

To develop our future leaders in our community, The Chamber hosts an annual FFA and 4-H agricultural program focused on career development in agriculture. And lastly, the overall role the Agriculture Committee plays in helping to unify the agriculture community and focus on long-term issues of importance to the economic climate of agriculture in Lancaster County speaks to community leadership.

If you're not a member of The Chamber and you value the services and voice we are providing to the farming industry, you may want to consider becoming involved in The Chamber and joining as a member. For more information on The Chamber's Agriculture Services Program or on membership, contact Brent Landis, agriculture services coordinator at (717) 397-3531, ext. 134, or blandis@lcci.com.

Rendell Administration Announces $40 Million Commitment to Pennsylvania's Nation-Leading Preservation Program

36 Farms Preserved at February Meeting

HARRISBURG (Dauphin Co.) — Pennsylvania will continue to be the farmland preservation leader among states. Agriculture Secretary Designee Dennis C Wolff announced recently that the State Agricultural Land Preservation Board voted to commit $40 million to Pennsylvania's nationleading farmland preservation program.

"We must take every step to preserve Pennsylvania's rich agricultural heritage," said Secretary Wolff. "Today, our State Agricultural Land Preservation Board committed $40 million to preserving agriculture's foundation, our farmland. To further our preservation effort across Pennsylvania, county farmland preservation boards have committed a record-breaking $25.6 million."

"Pennsylvania can be proud of the leadership role we have in farmland preservation. Our program continues to provide an example for other states to follow," noted Secretary Wolff.

The State Agricultural Land Preservation Board continued its farmland preservation success story with the preservation of 36 farms totaling 3,683 acres at the February meeting. This brings the total number of farms preserved since the inception of the farmland preservation program in 1989 to 2,109 farms and 249,840 acres.

The State Agricultural Land Preservation Board purchases the development rights, referred to as easements, to preserve Pennsylvania's prime farmland. Currently, there are 53 counties participating in the farmland preservation program.

The Department of Agriculture administers the Installment Purchase Agreement Program (IPA) to assist farmers in planning easement purchases. This program allows landowners to defer capital gains taxes, thereby allowing county preservation programs to use funding for preservation of other farms. Clair Neal of West Sadsbury Township, Chester County was accepted into the IPA program at the February meeting.

To further assist in preserving productive agricultural land, the Department of Agriculture operates the Land Trust Reimbursement Program. This program has helped preserve 3,063 acres approved in eight trusts.

Farm Bureau Urges More Action On Farm Damage By Elk

NORTH BEND (Clinton Co.) — Using a portion of elk hunting license proceeds for an indemnity fund for farms where elk cause crop damage were among the recommendations offered by Pennsylvania Farm Bureau during a public hearing here by the state House Majority Policy Committee.

Jerry Barnett, a Potter County farmer and a member of Pennsylvania Farm Bureau's State Wildlife Advisory Committee, testified before the committee.

"In the past decade, and more notably in the last four years, many farmers and landowners have experienced property and crop damage due to the quickly expanding Pennsylvania elk population," Barnett said. "Farmers know they will experience some crop loss from wildlife such as deer, raccoons, and geese. Farmers should not be expected, however, to accept losses free of charge resulting from an animal that was transplanted into his agricultural range without his knowledge or input."

Barnett also said farmers report as much crop and property damage caused by tourists and trespassers as by the elk.

Solutions recommended by Pennsylvania Farm Bureau include:

•A study to determine the efficiency and effectiveness of using some proceeds from the state lottery and the sale of elk licenses to compensate farmers for elk damage.

•Study and action by the General Assembly to address the increasing occurrence of trespass and private property rights infringements caused by elk tourists.

While Farm Bureau praised efforts by the Pennsylvania Game Commission and Department of Conservation and Natural Resources through a six- point plan to address nuisance elk complaints and educate tourists, Barnett said such programs do not address the long- term problems associated with elk and property damage.

Wolff Joins Gov. Rendell, State Lawmakers In Recognizing National FFA Week

PHILADELPHIA — Agriculture Secretary Dennis C Wolff joined Pennsylvania Governor Edward G. Rendell at W.B. Saul High School in Philadelphia last week to recognize National FFA Week and Pennsylvania's pride in its FFA program.

"Pennsylvania agriculture has a very bright future," said Gov. Rendell. "The young men and women in blue and gold continue to lead the way in agriculture. For 75 years they have stood for progress, vision, and change always prepared to take on the challenge and embrace the opportunities of agriculture."

"Agriculture education programs have played a vital role in shaping agriculture and our commonwealth," said Agriculture Secretary Dennis C Wolff. "The students that participate in this curriculum gain valuable lifelong skills that prepare them to be productive citizens of our society by building leadership, fellowship, scholarship, and teamwork skills."

During the visit at W.B. Saul, Rendell and Wolff met with the FFA state officer team and members of the Philadelphia FFA Chapter at W.B. Saul.

With more than 8,000 members across Pennsylvania, FFA is one of the largest intra-curricular youth organizations in the state, providing high school students with the opportunity to build enduring skills through the FFA motto, "Learning to do, doing to learn, earning to live, living to serve."

Wolff noted that FFA and agricultural education provide a strong foundation for the youth of America and the future of the food, fiber, and natural resource systems.

The third largest FFA chapter in the nation is W.B. Saul High School in Philadelphia.

Chartered in 1929, Pennsylvania FFA has over 142 chapters statewide.

Nationally, FFA is celebrating its 75th anniversary.

The Department of Agriculture invited the Pennsylvania FFA to locate its administrative office at the department last year. In addition, the Pennsylvania legislature has provided $104,000 to support the FFA Foundation, allowing FFA members to participate in state and national educational events.

To learn more about Pennsylvania FFA visit their homepage at www.paffa.state.pa.us or contact Mike Brammer, Pennsylvania FFA Executive Manager, at (717) 705-9551.

Passing On The Farm Workshop March 20

YORK (York Co.) — Planning for your successor, or someone to take over your farm, is the most important task you need to complete if you want your farm to survive into the next generation. Yet, according to some recent statistics, many farm families have not identified a successor for their family business or even talked to family members about what will happen to the farm when they die.

To assist you in this process, Pennsylvania Farm Link and Penn State Extension will hold a Passing On the Farm Workshop at the York County Extension Office at 112 Pleasant Acres Road, York, March 20 from 9:30 a.m. to 3:30 p.m.

Farmers seeking ideas for successfully passing their farm to family members, or those interested in locating interested, unrelated farmers to take over an operation, should attend. Beginning farmers are also urged to participate to glean ideas for building their businesses.

Topics covered will include:

•Bringing the next generation into the farm business.

•Business planning for a farm transfer.

•Financing for new farmers.

•Crop insurance.

•Estate planning and legal implications.

•Farmland preservation.

The workshop will conclude with a panel of local farmers discussing how they transferred their own farms.

Lunch is on your own. Reservations are required by March 18. Please contact Pennsylvania Farm Link at (717) 664-7077 to register and for additional information.

Farm Transfer Workshops Reach Out To N.Y.'s Small Farms

Adam Matthews
Cornell Small Farms Program

According to the "Dairy Farm Business Summary," the average age of the principal operators and owners of small farms in New York State is 50 years. Cornell Cooperative Extension farm management educators from across the state have been looking for ways to help ensure that these farms will be passed on to the next generation. Farm transfer is something that takes careful planning and a long period of time to implement, but owners of small farm businesses, with their limited time for both management and daily tasks, are particularly challenged.

Steve Richards, director of the New York FarmLink Program, was well acquainted with the importance of education in the successful transfer of small farms. New York FarmLink was created in 1996 to bring exiting farm owners into contact with interested farm-seekers. Richards helped create a database to keep track of both owners and seekers in the farm transfer process.

The FarmLink database shows that 93 percent of participants are small farms. Two recent surveys of participants showed that all parties were interested in further education on farm transfer topics. Richards was also aware that at the NY FarmNet toll-free help-line, one out of every three calls is a request for information regarding farm transfer and that 85 percent of all calls to FarmNet in 2001 were from small farms.

Richards knew that FarmLink was a good idea, but he saw that improvements could be made in the area of owner/seeker networking and education. He worked with a group of CCE farm management educators from across New York State to put together a proposal to Cornell's Small Farms Program. The group received a CCE grant for innovative small farm education for their "Farm Transfer Education Project."

The group hoped to bring farm owners and farm seekers together for joint education. Seekers would become better prepared to write a business plan, create a resume, and complete a loan application. Owners would become better prepared in presenting their farm to seekers and would be made aware of the options in farm transfer that are available to them. Both owners and seekers would be linked with local resources for farm transfer, and Cooperative extension educators would be linked with on-campus resources for farm transfer (FarmLink).

Regional Workshops

Prior to the workshops, Richards and his colleagues had developed resource materials, including a "Senior Business Transfer Guide" for exiting farmers, a "Junior Business Transfer Guide" for beginning farmers, and a "Facilitator's Guide." They also contacted farmers so that they could help decide the agenda of the programs based on their questions and their situations (what stage of farm transfer they were in). Local agents polled farm families on their needs as well as the best time and location for their programs.

Richards organized a training for farm transfer facilitators in September 2002 at the Wyndham Hotel in Syracuse. All of the CCE farm management educators involved in the regional programs attended. The group reviewed draft materials and began planning a series of regional workshops.

The group agreed that one of their main objectives was to help farm owners and farm seekers recognize that farm transfer is a process, and to see the value of the entire process, not just the final agreement. Personal issues are all-important, and need to be discussed prior to an agreement.

Organizers also wanted to show farmers that there are people available to help with the farm transfer process. FarmNet consultants, CCE educators and other professionals are available to help with discussions, and the new workbooks provide a valuable framework for planning.

Results

Eight farm transfer workshops were conducted across the state during November and December, 2002. A total of 51 families — 137 individuals — attended the series of workshops. The audience was predominantly dairy and predominantly small farms, although the advertising was targeted to a more general audience. Some owners of larger farms were in attendance, as well as two beginning farmers.

As a result of the workshops, some farmers are already starting the process of farm transfer. One participant sold his dairy herd, another put a farm transfer agreement into place, and a third sought the help of a grazing expert to make his operations more viable for a transfer to his son. Also, a number of farmers are actively using the workbooks to help them along in the farm transfer process.

Workshop facilitators believe that the method of teaching by informal discussion was a key to success. Participants indicated that they gained a lot of insight from other participants. Joan Petzen, Allegany County CCE, saw the benefits of this approach immediately:

"In South Dayton, splitting the group into different generations helped both (owners and seekers) realize that their goals were similar, which they hadn't realized prior to the seminar." Petzen says that in the Belmont workshop, the real-life example of a young couple seeking to take over the family farm served as a focal point for the discussion. The group shared ideas while working to help this young couple develop a strategy for moving the transfer process forward.

Because the personal side of farm transfers was included along with the necessary technical tools and information, attendees were able to gain an understanding that many others struggle with as they work toward transferring farm businesses. A primary key to success was giving people plenty of time to share ideas, discuss them, and ask questions of one another.

To follow up the success of the workshops, CCE farm management educators plan to repeat the course offering in the future, help to facilitate farm transfers, and provide both farm owners and farm seekers additional individual attention.

For more information on farm transfer issues, contact your local Cornell Cooperative Extension office. For information about the New York FarmLink Program, contact Steve Richards at (800) 547-3276, str4@cornell.edu. For general small farm information, visit Cornell's Small Farms Program Website at www.smallfarms.cornell.edu.

The "Senior Business Transfer Guide" for exiting farmers, "Junior Business Transfer Guide" for beginning farmers, and a "Facilitator's Guide" can be ordered by calling the NY FarmLink Program at (800) 547-3276. The cost is just $10 to cover printing and postage.

Cattle-Fax Reports On Status Of Cattle Industry

DENVER, Colo. — Cattlemen should expect higher average prices for all classes of cattle during 2003, according to Cattle-Fax, the cattle industry market analysis and information organization which serves beef producers in all segments of the industry. Following are more insights into the cattle situation offered in its recent report on the status of the industry.

Tighter fed cattle supplies and smaller total beef production will drive much of the increase in cattle prices. Cattle feeders and stocker operations are expected to post solid profits during the first half of 2003. This will begin to replace some of the equity lost during 2002 and will underpin demand and prices for feeder cattle and calves.

Cattle feeders lost between $35 and $40 per head on average during 2002. This loss of equity will limit price increases for feeder cattle and calves through the first half of the year as margin operators are likely to be more disciplined in their purchasing decisions.

Cattle feeders, stocker operators, backgrounders, and cow-calf producers should all experience more consistent and positive profit margins during 2003. Market cow and breeding cattle prices should be higher in 2003. The latter will depend to a large degree on range and pasture conditions. The current drought conditions throughout much of the West and Northern Plains may have a greater impact on prices during 2003 than during 2002.

During 2003, fed-cattle prices should average about $73 to $74/cwt., about $6/cwt. higher than the previous year. Feeder steers weighing 750 pounds are expected to average about $82/cwt., up $3 to $4/cwt. from 2002 due to tight feeder cattle supplies and the profits attained by cattle feeders during the past few months. Steer calves weighing 500 pounds are expected to average about $95 to $96/cwt., about $5/cwt. higher than a year earlier.

Total cattle numbers continued to decline in 2002 but record heavy carcass weights increased beef production to a new record. Lower prices during 2002 were the result of smaller slaughter totals being more than offset by heavier carcass weights, which inflated beef production.

Beef production levels are expected to be 4% to 5% smaller than a year earlier during the first and second quarters of 2003, which will support fed cattle prices and allow cattle feeders to gain bargaining position.

Fed cattle slaughter for 2003 is expected to decline about 600,000 head (2%) to 28.6 million head. Beef production for the year is expected to fall below 2002 levels by about 2%, totaling 26.3 billion pounds.

Competitive meat supplies during 2003 will be mixed, with pork supplies declining 1% to 2% and poultry supplies increasing about 2%. Total meat supplies during 2003, as a result, are expected to be even-to-slightly smaller than those of 2002.

Grain prices were volatile during 2002 and are expected to remain so during 2003. There is always weather risk associated with corn prices. This is especially true this year as U.S. ending stocks are the smallest since the 1996/1997 crop year. Total corn acres planted are expected to increase but good growing conditions will be needed to attain high enough yields to produce a crop approaching or exceeding 10 billion bushels.

Beef exports are expected to increase by 5% to 7% in 2003 from 2002 levels. If this level of growth is attained, 2003 beef exports could be record large. The continued fallout of the BSE discovery in Japan will impact U.S. beef export tonnage through at least the first half of 2003. Korea and Mexico are expected to remain growth opportunities for the U.S. beef industry. Imports will increase slightly, due primarily to the higher prices for lean trimmings and smaller domestic beef production. Trimmings account for the majority of beef imported by the U.S.

WVPT To Premiere Weekly Televised Farm Series

HARRISONBURG, Va. — WVPT — Virginia's Public Television will premiere the Commonwealth's only locally produced, weekly televised farm series "Virginia Farming" with special guest Congressman Bob Goodlatte, Friday, March 28, 8-8:30 p.m.

Writer and award-winning Shenandoah Valley farm radio broadcaster Jeff Ishee will host the new series. "This television program is an exciting development for the rural and agricultural community," said Ishee, who will invite guests from across the state to discuss Virginia's poultry, beef, dairy, crop, wine, seafood, timber, aquaculture, and related industries.

"My primary goal is to be of service to farmers and agribusiness," said Ishee. "Agriculture is important not only to our statewide economy, but it is also important to each of the 45,000 farm families in Virginia." Included in each weekly 30-minute program will be long-range agricultural weather forecasts, market trends, and a salute to individual farm communities.

Special guest Representative Bob Goodlatte was recently elected to serve as Chairman of the full House Agriculture Committee. Goodlatte has served on this committee since first being elected to Congress in November 1992. Previously he was Chairman of the Agriculture Subcommittee on Department, Operations, Oversight, Nutrition, and Forestry.

Goodlatte served as a conferee on the 2002 Farm Bill, working to provide programs to rural Americans who are in need of a stable farm economy, while providing suburban and urban Americans with the safest, most abundant and most affordable food supply in the world.

Goodlatte is a graduate of Washington and Lee University School of Law, and his undergraduate degree in Government was earned at Bates College in Lewiston, Maine.

Jeff Ishee is Farm director for WSVA radio in Harrisonburg and hosts "On the Farm Radio," a syndicated radio show for listeners in Virginia, West Virginia, Maryland, Pennsylvania, Tennessee, and North Carolina. He has a website www.onthefarmradio.com.

He manages two retail farmers' markets in Staunton and Verona, Virginia, and has consulted with numerous organizations on issues relating to public farmers' markets. Ishee wrote and published Dynamic Farmers' Marketing: A Guide to Successfully Selling Your Farmers' Market Products in 1997. He is a columnist for The Virginia Gardener magazine, as well as Staunton's Daily News Leader.

Ishee has served on the Environmental Awards Selection Committees of the Virginia Poultry Federation, and has served as Vice President of the Virginia Farmers Direct Marketing Association.

Ishee received the Virginia Farm Bureau Federation's Agriculture Journalism Award for Broadcasting (radio category) in 1999, 2000, 2001, and 2002, as well as an Honorary Degree from the Future Farmers of America in 2000.

Bert Schmidt, president and general manager of WVPT, said that he was "thrilled to have Jeff Ishee join WVPT's family of public affairs programming. 'Virginia Farming' is a program by farmers, for farmers and is intended to address issues important to people within the agricultural industry."

"Virginia Farming" will air Fridays at 8 p.m. and repeat Saturdays at noon and Sundays at 6 a.m. on Virginia's public television channels.

Gov. Rendell Urged To Support Classroom Standards For Agriculture Studies

PHILADELPHIA — An alliance of organizations representing Pennsylvania agriculture urged Gov. Ed Rendell to support adoption of a state curriculum standard for teaching about modern agriculture and informing students about careers related to agriculture and the food industry.

Rendell joined with a statewide Agricultural Education Coalition for a celebration of National FFA Week at the Walter Biddle Saul High School, an event which also included Pennsylvania's Secretary of Agriculture Dennis Wolff.

"Everyone benefits when our children learn about food production and know about exciting career opportunities in the vast industry related to agriculture," said Michael Pechart, Pennsylvania Farm Bureau's director of local government affairs. "Guidelines for teaching about agriculture are buried in other curriculum requirements and need to be established as separate curriculum standards."

Greeted by hundreds of FFA members and agriculture representatives, Rendell and Wolff were provided a tour of the agricultural sections of W.B. Saul High School, which has the largest FFA chapter in the northeastern U.S.

The Agriculture Education Coalition consists of the Pennsylvania Association of Agricultural Educators, Pennsylvania Young Farmers Association, Agriculture Awareness Foundation, PennAg Industries Association, Pennsylvania Farm Bureau, Franklin County Farm Bureau, Penn State University Agricultural and Education Extension, the Council of Farm Organizations, and the Pennsylvania FFA Association.

Gov. Edward Rendell, center right, joined Agriculture Secretary Dennis Wolff and the State FFA Officer team at W.B. Saul High School in Philadelphia to celebrate National FFA Week.

Pa. Certified Organic Celebrates 6 Years

HARRISBURG (Dauphin Co.) — In an event that showcased product integrity, diversity, and environmental stewardship, Pennsylvania Certified Organic (PCO) concucted its annual meeting at the Pennsylvania Farm Show Complex Jan. 22.

Executive Director Leslie Zuck underscored the organization's accomplishments throughout the course of the past year. She noted that PCO was one of about 28 U.S. certifiers to be accredited by the USDA.

In addition to implementing existing National Organic Standards, PCO has plays an active role in shaping and defining forthcoming policy, Zuck said. Zuck serves on a steering committee of the Organic Trade Association, which helps different national certifying agencies maintain uniformity.

PCO's Materials Team in 2002 published a list of substances that are allowed or prohibited in an organic system. PCO also published a list of organic seed and seedling resources.

Zuck emphasized that Pennsylvania consumers are fortunate to have diverse organic food choices. She pointed out the vast array organic products that had been provided by attendees of the meeting, which ranged from beets, eggs, mushrooms, and pretzels to flour, apple pies, and calf feed.

Zuck underscored the importance of strengthening the connection between the growers and the consumers. To achieve this, PCO will endeavor to increase the availability of regional organic food by publishing resources for consumers and by working with farmers markets, growers' cooperatives, community supported farms, and the internet.

Representatives from PCO's committees also spoke at the annual meeting. President Mike Brownback reminisced that in 1996, visionary organic farmers and processors had met at the Farm Show Complex to organize and start PCO. In 2003, PCO is both a USDA-accredited certifying agent and is internationally accredited to perform certification services.

Alfred Walker, PCO Certification Committee Chair, reported that PCO certified 251 operations in 2002, including more than 200 organic field crop farms, 35 processor-handlers, 16 farmer-processors, 84 dairy farms, 96 vegetable growers, 25 poultry producers, 18 other livestock farms, maple syrup operations, and mushroom producers. Walker also stressed that PCO has the opportunity to help to further define some of the forthcoming livestock standards, such as poultry outdoor access, on the national level.

Jeff Moyer, co-chair of the education committee, stressed that organic farmers are the best educators when they talk to their customers. He introduced a new website sponsored by the Rodale Institute: www.newfarm.org.

Other organizations represented at the annual meeting included the Pennsylvania Association for Sustainable Agriculture (PASA).

Brian Snyder, PASA executive director, outlined some of the common goals of both organizations, ranging from political action to supporting concerns of individual farmers and consumers. According to Snyder, cooperation between PASA and PCO serves to strengthen the missions of both the organizations and their supporters.

Anyone who is interested in becoming a member or learning more about organic certification is encouraged to contact PCO at (814) 364-1344 or info@paorganic.org.

Certification information and organic standards are available at www.paorganic.org or by contacting PCO.

A Look At The Economic Advantages Of Polled Cattle

Fred Hendricks
SunShower Acres
Longmont, Colo.

Incorporating polled genetics in your breeding program results in fewer calves that require dehorning. While this fact may seem elementary, few dairy farmers contemplate the economic advantages. Most often farmers respond with "dehorning is part of our routine operation, so it's not an important factor."

Breeding a typical dairy herd to polled bulls results in a minimum 50 percent hornless calves. In just one generation, a herd can become half polled. The polled gene is dominant and needs to be present in only one parent.

While dehorning may be a routine operation on most dairy farms, there are significant costs associated with dehorning. These costs vary a great deal, depending on the size of dairy, personnel employed to do the dehorning, and equipment utilized. The most difficult cost to ascertain is the setback a calf goes through resulting from dehorning.

Reid Hoover, Hoover Farms, Lebanon, indicates his dehorning costs to be $10 per head on young calves and up to $20 per head on older calves. "Equipment and labor are the costs involved. When they are older, it sets them back, and you lose growth and efficiency," said Hoover.

Hoover said, "These costs and the time factor to do this job well have made me think about using polled bulls. We have used a few and have liked the results with polled calves."

Enhanced Efficiency

Lonny Ward, manager of BYU Dairy, Spanish Fork, Utah, tags their dehorning costs at about $2 per head. "This figure does not calculate a cost for the setback losses, because there is too much variation in those costs."

Ward points out that polled cattle enhance their dairy's efficiency. "To survive in the dairy industry today, you have to be as efficient as possible. Any time you can eliminate a cost without a negative consequence, you are better off. Dehorning is an area where improvements can be made genetically to eliminate a labor cost and stress on the animal. If we can integrate the polled gene into the Holsteins without losing in other areas, we will have taken a step forward."

Iv-Ann Holsteins, Minister, Ohio, indicates the setback to their calves is their biggest cost. "In our opinion, the cost of dehorning is very hard to quantify since we do our own work. However, we think our biggest cost is the setback in the growth of the animal caused by the dehorning trauma."

Ivo Osterloh, owner of Iv-Ann Holsteins, said "The cost is not the only factor we consider in our use of polled bulls. Dehorning is not a very pleasant job—and very often it is delayed too long."

Origin Of Polled Dairy Cattle

Polled Holstein Historian Dr. Larry Specht, professor emeritus of Penn State, noted "The history books tell us that the ancestors of our modern cattle did not have horns, and that mutations must have occurred that gave rise to horns. Horned cattle proliferated, and it is now thought that the occurrence of polled animals in modern times is the result of another mutation back to the hornless condition."

Horns served a useful purpose prior to cattle being domesticated. They were a defense mechanism and served to survive the species. In some countries, farmers tether their cattle by the horns. In modern dairy farm operations, horns have no purpose—therefore the practice of dehorning.

While it is not clear when polled cattle began appearing in U.S. dairy cattle, Specht found the earliest recorded polled bull in the Holstein Association herdbook to be born April 22, 1889. Various breeders propagated the polled gene over time to where the polled gene now occurs far more frequently in today's dairy cattle herds.

In his Bouic Polled Holstein Newsletter, Frank Bouic reports "There are over 25 polled Holstein bulls in AI, including proven bulls, sires-in-waiting, and sample sires."

Bouic noted "The genetics available in the polled segment of the Holstein breed is improving rapidly, in some cases approaching the best of the Holstein breed. The Burket-Falls, East Freedom, Pennsylvania (Dave Burket Family) and Hickorymea, Airville, Pennsylvania (T. Edwin Johnson Family) herds in particular have contributed to the supply of AI bulls."

The polled gene has been present in Red and White dairy cattle for many years. Therefore, the Red and White population has a significantly large selection of polled red and white carrier bulls.

Second-generation polled Jersey breeder Paul Chittenden, Dutch Hollow Farm, Schodack Landing, N.Y. indicates that his father, Stanley Chittenden, bought his first polled Jersey in 1952. The Chittendens have been leading breeders of polled Jersey cattle ever since. The Dutch Hollow prefix can be found on several proven sires in AI.

The polled gene is also well documented in both the Ayrshire and Milking Shorthorn breeds.

In conclusion, utilizing the polled gene is easier than ever before with additional sires available through AI. The financial savings through labor, time, equipment, and sustained growth of the animal can be substantial. And a herd can be converted to poll in short order with polled being dominant.

Dairy Tiestalls Boost Profit Potential For Some Producers

DAVE LEFEVER
Lancaster Farming Staff

KUTZTOWN (Berks Co.) — Are tiestall barns obsolete?

Not at all, according to Galen Kopp, Lebanon County dairy agent. Many dairy producers in the area have been relying on their tiestall setups to give them an edge in cow care and milk production.

Kopp joined Dan McFarland, extension ag engineer, and Clyde Myers, Berks County extension agent at a meeting here Thursday to discuss how good tiestall design can be used to get the most from the milking herd. About 25 local farmers attended.

The top reasons some dairy managers prefer tiestalls over a freestall setup is that the tiestalls allow more individual cow care, observation, and feed monitoring, McFarland said.

That can be a matter of individual management preference. According to McFarland, the main thing is that the facilities "excite the caretaker" and result in a well-kept herd.

While tiestalls tend to be more economical for smaller herds of less than 80 cows, McFarland noted a growing number of producers putting in tiestalls for herd sizes of 80 to 200 cows.

A significant number of producers with tiestall facilities have "very high production per cow," McFarland said. In his travels throughout the area, however, he has also seen a number of tiestall operations that provided "substandard" attention to the cows.

Any animal housing arrangement needs to apply five basic things, McFarland said, and tiestalls are no exception. These animal shelter "basics" are a clean, dry, comfortable space; good ventilation; good feed access; good water access, and sure footing.

McFarland outlined the components of good tiestall barn design, including stall dimensions, bedding, feed and water access, and ventilation.

In many cases, older tiestall barns can be modified to enhance cow comfort and performance.

McFarland pointed out some trends in tiestall systems. Natural ventilation systems are becoming more popular in the area, and the use of sand for bedding is on the rise, he said.

As an inorganic substance, sand has been noted for reducing somatic cell counts and mastitis.

In addressing the all-important topic of ventilation, McFarland went back to the 19th century to quote W.D. Hoard, founder of Hoard's Dairyman.

"We are rapidly coming to understand that we have to furnish pure air to our cows," Hoard pointed out in 1885.

Types of air-exchange in dairy barns today include fan-driven positive and negative pressure systems and natural ventilation. Natural ventilation relies on adjustable sidewalls and ridge stacks, and depends on the cows' heat to move air out through ridge venting.

McFarland said he doesn't recommend tunnel ventilation for year-round use. In this system, where air is drawn lengthwise through the barn, air exchange is too rapid for cold weather, he said. Another drawback is that a fan tends to lose its ability to pull air at distances of more than 75 feet.

An ideal ventilation system provides fresh air to the cows on a constant basis.

"The goal is to have air quality inside equal the air quality outside," McFarland said.

McFarland quoted Robert Graves, Penn State ag engineer, in summing up the principle of complete air exchange.

"If it smells like a barn, it needs better ventilation," Graves said.

Kopp noted the benefits that some dairyman are seeing from well-designed tiestall facilities.

One Lebanon County dairyman saw his herd average jump from about 19,000 pounds to 29,000 pounds over a 14-month period after moving his herd from freestalls to a new tiestall barn. While other management practices also contributed to the production boost, the new tiestalls were a major factor, according to Kopp.

Pa. Ag Committee Sets Hearing On Pooling Issues

DAVE LEFEVER
Lancaster Farming Staff

HARRISBURG (Dauphin Co.) — The Pennsylvania Agriculture and Rural Affairs Committee will conduct a public hearing March 19 on the establishment of an over-order "pooling" rule for premiums paid to dairy farmers for Class I (beverage) milk produced, processed, and sold in Pennsylvania.

The pooling regulation, first submitted last year by the Pennsylvania Milk Marketing Board (PMMB), would require 45 percent of the over-order premium to be distributed among all Pennsylvania dairy farmers.

The hearing was called by Mike Waugh, chairman of the Senate Agriculture and Rural Affairs Committee.

"This issue has proven to be quite contentious, divisive, and complicated," Waugh noted in a statement. "As a result, and after receiving questions from several members, I am announcing a public hearing to receive testimony from the many affected parties on this issue."

Several major milk cooperatives in the state have weighed in on different sides of the issue.

The House Agriculture and Rural Affairs Comittee, chaired by Raymond Bunt, will also participate in the hearing.

The hearing will take place at the Toftrees Resort and Conference Center in State College on March 19 at 10 a.m.

Keystone Farm Holstein Tops Convention Sale

BETHLEHEM (Northampton Co.) — A consignment by Keystone Farm, Easton, topped the Pennsylvania Holstein Convention Sale here Feb. 20.

A first choice Morty or Champion by Keystone Con Precious sold for $10,300, highest bid at the sale. Michael and Cynthia Weimer, Emlenton, were the buyers.

Second high-selling lot, at $8,800, was a first choice Finley by Miss Solid Gold LL Lash, consigned by the Weimers and purchased by Sharon Gentile of Glen Rock.

Peachey Lee Tina, consigned by Tyler Peachey of Petersburg, went for $7,000, third highest at the sale. Tina Syndicate of Harrisburg was the buyer.

The sale averaged $3,373 on 73 lots for a gross total of $246,200.

Act Quickly For Crop Insurance Benefits

CAMP HILL (Cumberland Co.) — Pennsylvania is one of 15 states where farmers can significantly increase their crop insurance coverage without paying a higher net premium, but producers must sign-up by March 15, according to Pennsylvania Farm Bureau.

The "Targeted States Crop Insurance Financial Assistance Program" offered by USDA's Risk Management Agency (RMA) will provide the financial assistance to farmers in states that have been underserved by crop insurance.

"Crop insurance premiums have just been discounted for Pennsylvania farmers," said Joel Rotz, Pennsylvania Farm Bureau's Director of National Legislative Program. "Farmers should contact their crop insurance agent immediately to take advantage of the new benefit."

based on a strict analysis of protein content, moisture, butterfat, or other grading mechanism, and seldom complain when the standards are clear and applied fairly. Such arrangements don't dictate how a farmer manages their operation, but reward outcomes.

Rewarding environmental performance should not be any different. It is, in fact, the fairest way to allocate the costs and rewards of activities that protect or improve the quality of our soil, water, and air.

I am writing in response to the Saturday, Feb. 8, Lancaster Farming lead story on "Red Power." I enjoyed reading about the festivities that are planned for the June event that will celebrate the heritage of International Harvester. I work for Case IH, and am proud to be associated with the legacy of IH.

Accordingly, I was disturbed by two comments in the article. First of all, the story says that "Cub Cadet...eventually assumed Case IH's tractor line." This comment is misleading. In fact, Cub Cadet only assumed the lawn and garden portion of International Harvester's product line . The Case IH product line includes a full line of agricultural tractors and was born out of the consolidation of Case and IH in 1985.

Secondly, the article depicted IH going out of business as "sort of an Enron thing." The Enron debacle involved criminal activity, and it is unfair and inaccurate to make such a comparison.

IH was one of the great companies of all time, and many of its people, products, dealers, and customers have carried on that tradition through the Case IH brand today. I applaud the efforts of organizations such as Red Power, as they are keeping the spirit of IH alive as well.

NE, Mid-Atlantic States Targeted For Reduced Crop Insurance Costs

WASHINGTON, D.C. — USDA's Risk Management Agency (RMA) last week made available up to $18 million to reduce the cost of crop insurance programs in 15 historically underserved states. RMA will provide financial assistance to producers under the Agricultural Management Assistance (AMA) program, authorized by the Federal Crop Insurance Act (FCIA).

The Targeted States Crop Insurance Financial Assistance Program is available to producers purchasing policies after February 20, 2003, and acreage reporting dates prior to September 30, 2003, in the following states: Connecticut, Delaware, Maine, Maryland, Massachusetts, Nevada, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New York, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, Utah, Vermont, West Virginia, and Wyoming.

"Crop insurance is a vital part of risk management in American agriculture," said Risk Management Agency Administrator Ross J. Davidson, Jr. "This financial assistance will assist and encourage producers in these underserved states to use crop insurance products to manage their price and production risks."

The funding announcement was made by Secretary Veneman during remarks to the 79th Annual Agricultural Outlook Forum in Arlington, Va. The Secretary announced a new risk management initiative being undertaken by USDA to examine risk management tools, identify underserved producers and closely examine the regions, commodities and risks and then prioritize the development of new products to fill the gaps identified.

The priorities of this initiative include examining the need to serve the livestock industry, including forage and range coverage; addressing concerns with coverage in regions facing multi-year droughts; simplifying and improving the effectiveness of various insurance products; and reviewing various RMA authorities to ensure the soundness of the delivery systems and effective oversight of the crop insurance industry.

Interested producers should contact their agent regarding program eligibility and availability. A list of crop insurance agents is available at local Farm Service Agency offices or by using RMA's Agent Locator at: http://www3.rma.usda.gov/tools/agents/.

New Website To Help Dairy Producers

UNIVERSITY PARK (Centre Co.) — Penn State's College of Agricultural Sciences and Pennsylvania Dairy Stakeholders have developed a new Website designed to help dairy farmers find valuable business resources.

Dairy Farm Resource Planning Guide at http://dairydevelopment.psu.edu is a listing of service providers and educational resources to assist dairy producers, especially those developing a new business or expanding an existing business.

The site lists many of the important, necessary items to consider before embarking on an expansion or developing a new farm. It lists contact information related to all aspects of planning, including engineering, obtaining permits, building, employee training, neighbor relations, and others.

Partial funding for the Website came from the Pennsylvania Department of Agriculture.

According to Vines, the Website will be an ever-evolving project, constantly changing as regulations change and as new resources become available or outdated. She urges representatives of any business or educational entity interested in being listed in the guide to contact her at (814) 865-3097 or at kvines@psu.edu for more information.

After 26 Years In Agrifinance, Boyd Retires

es 4-H and FFA leaders in agriseminars throughout his career and in purchasing their animal projects at sales.

"The opportunity I had as a 4-H'er for 10-21 years has molded me to be the leader I am today," Boyd said.

"It's taught me to win with humility, to lose with dignity, and the importance of being sensitive to everyone."

As a 4-H'er, Boyd received the state's highest 4-H achievement award that enabled him to represent Pennsylvania at the National 4-H Congress. Even at that early age, Boyd's character was revealed in his quest for the achievement award. He had vied for the award three years. The first time, he came in third; the second time, he placed second; and the third time, he was the winner.

Perseverance is a characteristic that Boyd encourages people of all ages to aspire to.

Transferring farms from one generation to another is difficult for many families. Recognizing the emotional and financial difficulties, Boyd cosistently spent hours with families in helping them work through the process.

"I believe we are put here (on earth) not to take, but to give back resources," Boyd said.

He refers to both human and natural resources. One of the resources Boyd in particular sought to protect was land use. He was instrumental in establishing farmland preservation in the county.

In 1987, he worked to have state legislators approve a $100 million bond issue for buying permanent development rights from farms. Since then, 50,000 acres have been preserved through the county preservation and 250,000 through the state.

Boyd served as president of the Lancaster Farmland Trust from 1992-1995. He received the trust's 1995 Distinquished Service Award and was named to the state's Agricultural Land Preservation Board in 1996.

"Land is an irreplaceable resource," Boyd said of the need to preserve agriculture's prime farmland.

His stance to protect the dignity of others is perhaps best demonstrated by an incident that happened in 1987. At that time, the Ku Klux Klan marched in Ephrata. Boyd was instrumental in forming a prayer vigil where black and white stood in unity against the divisive tactics of the KKK.

Boyd arranged for a black minister and choir from Lancaster to start an exchange with his church to help strengthen understanding and acceptance. That exchange has continued after 15 years.

Boyd and his wife Linda have three children and reside in Akron. Another son is deceased. Boyd's honesty in baring his emotional pain in dealing with the loss of his son has enabled him to empathize with many other families dealing with loss.

Boyd's caring attitude prevails in business and personal dealings.

"He is a genuine caring person. It is not a put-on," Shaw said.

Evidence of Boyd's concern for individuals beyond the financial aspect of the family farm is recorded in the first agrifinance seminar, which he arranged 22 years ago. The theme was, "We Care For You And The Family Farm."

Throughout the successive 22 years of agrifinance seminars, Boyd has always included segments that deal with building healthy family relationships and emotional well-being.

Boyd was named director of agrifinance in 1977. During his tenure with the bank, which went through numerous mergers, the agrifinance department grew from a small customer base to $13 million in loans and 900 customers.

First Union leads in commercial bank lending to agriculture in the state. Boyd does not look at other lending institutions as competition. He said, "We are here to help each other. Anyone helping agriculture is a friend of mine."

Other highlights in Boyd's career include serving as chairman of the Agriculture and Rural Development Committee of the American Bankers Association in Washington, D.C. for the 1997-1998 term, and chairing the National Agriculture Bankers Conference in Milwaukee in 1997. Boyd is the only Pennsylvanian to chair the national organization in its 50-year history.

In 1998, Boyd received the George Delp Award. And in January of this year, Boyd accepted Pennsylvania's most prestigious agricultural award for First Union Bank's promotion and advancement of agriculture at the Agro 2003 Farm Show/ International dinner in Harrisburg.

At 61 years of age, Boyd said that he does not have plans for what he will do after retirement.

Boyd's last day with First Union is March 31.

"I will give my job 110 percent until then. After that, I'll think about the future," he said.

Dr. Ronald Hanson, left, stresses the importance of keeping a positive focus in farm family relationships. See next week's issue for this and more topics addressed at First Union's 22nd Agri-Education Seminar at the Farm and Home Center.

With a focus on show horse success, Lancaster Farming's Boarder & Trainer for March 15 includes ways to improve horse health using a new treadmill developed at the Marion DuPont Scott Equine Medical Center in Leesburg, Va. Also scheduled for that issue: highlights of the Steeplechase in Leesburg, Va., the work of farriers, and lots more!

	CATTLE	CALVES
THIS WEEK	2670	2014
LAST WEEK	1507	1414
LAST YEAR	2350	1836

Compared to last week's snow shortened runs slaughter steers sold steady to weak early in the week, with most of the pressure on the higher quality stock Late in the week demand picked up for the high Choice and Prime steers as prices were a full 1 00 higher on the long-feds Receipts were well over those of last week's snow markets as farmers were finally able to get out of their driveways And while this increased surge had the makings of over supplying the market the firm demand for meat kept its head above water Several bullish national factors could also be noted as supportive for the local finished trade The boxes were flying out of packers coolers this week, as the cutout value was several dollars higher over the week The February live cattle contract at the CME is about to expire but was very supportive this winter Everyone's attention will now turn to the summer contracts with the April contract currently at 76 00 with June and August showing some bearishness as they trade in the low to mid 60 00 range The major feeding areas in the West moved their live steers from 79 00-80.00 this week which is mostly steady Holstein steers sold mostly steady to firm for the entirety of the week with the uneven heifer supply trading near steady as well Slaughter cows sold steady to firm for the first two trading days this week However, when the cow carcass cutout value jumped 2 88 higher on Wednesday to a level of 91 96, packers took note and added some more money to their already high bids It was impressive to see the demand hold firm as Lancaster County recorded a run that included over 525 head on Tuesday, and another run on Thursday that put nearly 600 head in the books, with the cow grand total coming in at 1285 head this week Slaughter bulls sold steady to weak early with prices late in the week trending a full 1 00 to sharply higher This week's reported supply included 34 percent steers, 7 percent heifers, 49 percent cows, 6 percent bulls, with the balance feeder cattle

CALF SUMMARY Compared to last week, slaughter calves sold with a higher undertone on a light early week run, only to trend weak to 12 00 lower from Monday on out Holstein bull calves going into veal barns sold up to 20 00 higher on Monday only to trend weak to sharply lower on the heavy Tuesday run that included more than 1025 head However, demand picked back up on the Thursday run as prices trended sharply higher Needless-to-say it was a very supply and demand driven market this week, and still goes to show if the calf market is over supplied, demand will falter Holstein heifers sold mostly weaker for the entire weak, as the heifer market never seemed to find any support This week the PA Dept of Ag graded 1109 head in the two Lancaster County graded sales

"Push the button and the manure is gone!"

The May Family
Mercersburg, PA
62 x 19 Slurrystore® System

"During the recent cold spell, our lowest temperature was minus 5 degrees. We were able to scrape manure in our freestall barn into the piston ram pump every day. I didn't have to haul any manure out of the barn. When I turn on the pump, it gets rid of the manure. I don't miss hauling manure every day. I used to have nightmares about it. I don't know how I did it."

Danny, Frieda and Dave May

"My son Danny was really in favor of our Slurrystore purchase, and we are well satisfied with our Slurrystore. We had a 200 bu. corn yield two years ago with 75 lbs. of purchased nitrogen. The rest was slurry. We never had 200 bu. of corn in 25 years of farming. It's probably the first time this farm ever saw 200 bu. of corn per acre!"

New Spokespersons Crowned For New York Dairy Industry At 40th Anniversary Celebration

Meghan Fullington
ADADC Communications

SYRACUSE, N. Y. — Andrea Smith, Balston Spa, New York, was crowned the 2003-2004 New York State Dairy Princess on February 18, at the Hotel Syracuse the site of the first NYS Dairy Princess Pageant 40 years ago.

Having served as the Saratoga County Dairy Princess since spring of 2002, Andrea will devote an additional year promoting milk and dairy products with the American Dairy Association and Dairy Council, Inc. (ADADC).

As state princess, Smith received a $1,200 scholarship and will represent ADADC at county dairy princess pageants, farm meetings and a variety of special events. In addition, she will help train new county promoters at seminars and workshops. Sponsored by ADADC, the 40th annual coronation completed the yearlong reign of Jordanna Dodge, former Herkimer County Dairy Princess.

Kristen Chambers, Winthrop, New York (St. Lawrence County) was named first Alternate State Princess, and Jessica Hula, Jordanville, New York (Herkimer County) was selected as second Alternate State Princess. They receive a $700 scholarship and $600 scholarship, respectively. Both young women will assist the State Dairy Princess with training, appearances and other duties.

Promotion of dairy products is the major focus of the dairy princesses throught their reign as county princess. They are asked to meet specific requirements in order to compete for the crown. One of the ways ADADC awards them for their efforts is with the Public Relations Award. The girls are all given the opportunity to enter the selection of this award. They are asked to fill out an application on what they feel was their most visual public relations event. This is an award that is judged by ADADC and is given to the top three entries. The winners of this were: First Place receiving $200 - Montgomery County - Nicole Swartz. Second Place receiving $150 - St. Lawrence County - Kristen Chambers. Third Place receiving $100 - Herkimer County - Jessica Hula.

Thirty county dairy princesses competed in the state pageant. Judging included a personal interview, an impromptu and prepared adult speech, a product knowledge exam, writing skills test, and informal interaction with others. Judges evaluated the contestants on their communication skills, knowledge of the dairy industry, poise and personality.

The top three speech finalists were asked to present their speech at the pageant. They were awarded a $100 check from Crowley Foods LLC. Winners were Herkimer County - Jessica Hula; Rensselaer County - Janet Buonanno; Chenango County - Maggie Newbold.

Top three awards were also given to the highest scores in the written communications and product knowledge exams. Product knowledge winners were awarded a $100 check from NYS Dairy Foods Association and written communications from Country Folks. Product knowledge winners included first place - Cattaraugus County - Heather Poch; second place - Broome County - Kelly Campbell; and third place - Wayne County - Jessica Boise.

Written communications first place winner was Herkimer County - Jessica Hula; second place - Cattaraugus County - Heather Poch; and third place - Madison County - Martina Durfee.

After the tests were taken, the judges selected seven girls as the semi-finalists before crowning their top three. The semi-finalists were Allegany County - Sara Hinz; Herkimer County - Jessica Hula; Niagara-Orleans County - Alyssa Ranney; Onondaga County - Brynn Gillen-Dennis; Saratoga County - Andrea Smith; St. Lawrence County - Kristen Chambers; and Wayne County - Jessica Boise.

The seven finalists were then asked an impromptu question, "What do you feel is your biggest accomplishment thus far in your life?" Each girl was given the opportunity to answer the question.

The Miss Congeniality title, which is awarded to a county dairy princess who shows excitement, enthusiasm, and an outgoing personality is awarded by the dairy princess participants at the pageant. The 2003 Miss Congeniality was Jessica Jackson from Lewis County. She received a $100 check from Ron Trinca Photography.

Overall judges were Deidra Harkenrider, sales associate for Momentum-Media Sports Publishing, Freeville, NY; John Fullington, regional manager for ABS Global, Dundee, NY; and Lorrell Kenney, director of public relations for the New York Beef Industry Council, Chittenango, NY.

The pageant is also used as an opportunity to recognize those who have supported dairy promotion within their counties and who have gone above and beyond the call of duty where dairy promotion is concerned. The Golden Cow award is awarded each year to recognize outstanding service and dedication to local dairy promotion in New York State. Recipients were nominated by their counties and later selected by ADADC. The 2003 recipients of this award were Tom Farnell of Herkimer County and Sally Rusby of Chemung County.

Presented annually, the Promoter of The Year award recognizes a county that has done an outstanding job promoting milk and dairy products. The award is presented in memory of Robert S. Turner, a former ADADC chief executive officer and dairy farmer who was a strong supporter of the dairy princess program. The $500 scholarship is provided by the Turner Family and ADADC. Janet Bittner of Niagara-Orleans and her court achieved promotions with a dollar value totaling $5,167, throughout the year the county attended 501 school programs, 11 farm meetings, and wrote 88 newspaper articles for a total of 600 promotions.

On Being a Farm Wife

(and other hazards)

Joyce Bupp

Gray colors our world each morning, as dawn begins to meander up through the meadow.

Night's blackness eases away to the coming first hints of daylight and faint shapes begin to emerge from the paleness. A thick cluster of dark marks the woodlot's cluster of oak and locust trees, while shadowy silhouettes appear on our neighbor's houses on the hills. Far in the distance, poking through a gap in the hills, the picturesque spire of a community church points heavenward.

Distinctive notes telltale the early birds scratching through the seeds scattered around the snow remaining in the backyard. Over the quiet twittering of titmice and chickadees, a cardinal's clear chirps punctuate the morning's somber stillness.

A salmon hue eases over the gray in the eastern sky, gradually brightening to a stunning yellow. Suddenly,—bingo!—up pops the sun over the horizon. In the instant of that flooding with a golden glow, the day becomes warmer, happier, more friendly one.

If you happen to be the person milking the cows on the southeast-side row of the dairy barn, you suddenly find a need for sunglasses as the morning's brilliance shines directly in your eyes. But it can turn a mood in a moment.

How appropriate that the universal symbol of the "happy face," with black oval eyes and upturned curving grin, sports a face color of bright, sunshiny yellow. Because, any day the sun shines—and certainly no more than during these bleak, gray days of winter—is a happier, more upbeat-feeling day.

Our daughter and I pondered recently if there's an epidemic this year of SAD, the Seasonal Affective Disorder that leaves one feeling somewhat down, somewhat tired, somewhat depressed. Add to that, being cooped up in the house from bitter cold and multiple-feet of snow, and you get mobs of people fleeing to the mall or the marts the moment a plow goes past to escape confinement.

Tied to the lack of light during the short days of the season, maybe the affliction could just as easily be dubbed TOG, or Tired Of Gray.

With water levels at their critical lows just six months ago, it was obvious that our region's extreme droughty condition could only be corrected by lengthy and extensive injection of moisture. And we don't generally get moisture when the sun shines. We do get rainbows, those colorful upside-down smiles from heaven, but we don't usually get the sort of soaking water recharge that our ground so desperately needed.

So, it was a given that moisture correction would entail lengthy stretches of gray, dark, damp, dismal weather. Or, as the case may be, mounds and mountains of icy, blowing flakes of white.

Last week's deluge of rain into the mountains of snow sent cascades of water everywhere, creating for us our scenic whitewater stream pouring down the road, through the road culvert and on down the field road to swell our tiny stream many times its usual flow. But, for lots of folks, it meant collapsed roofs, injured and/or dead animals, barns and basements full of water, and accidents as returning arctic air transformed the runoff to treacherous black ice.

Done! Enough! The water levels are recharged!

Now we long for sunshine to temper the harsh grayness, to texture the wintry landscape with its warming glow and changing patterns of shadow. Sunshine to sparkle on the unfrozen corners of the ponds and toss diamonds across stretches of icy, hardened snow cover. Sunshine to flood through our windows and brighten our homes and our psyches.

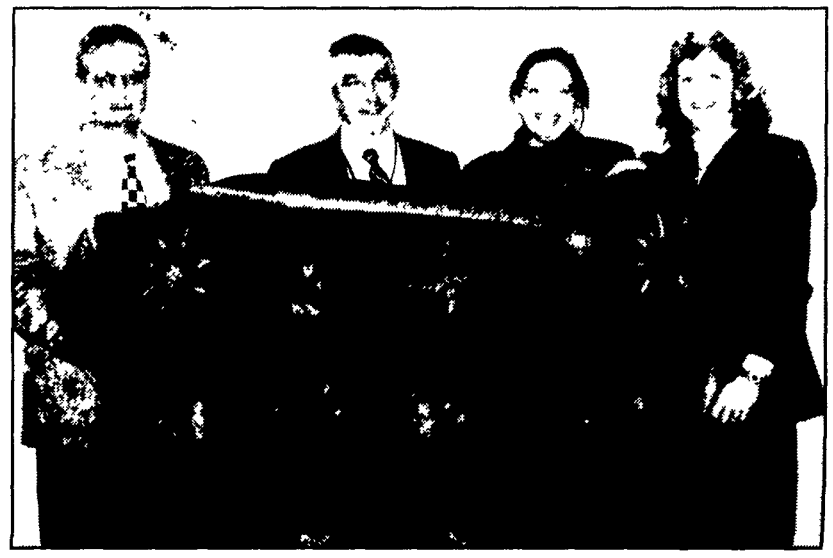
No need yet for excessive heat, just a little sunshine. Fruit trees need to remain dormant, and bulbs and perennials to remain safely tucked underground. Animals fare better if not exposed to extremes in temperature swings, just gentle moderation. And we certainly don't want any more winter—extending groundhogs to stay put.

There is an antidote to SAD and TOG and the cabin fever that sends folks out onto unsafe highways just to get out, go somewhere, go anywhere, flee the walls of confinement.

So we're sending out an SOS for the cure.

Send Our Sunshine.

Auction Raises $2,525 For Pennsylvania's Holstein Youth



Attendees at the Pennsylvania Holstein Association's Annual Awards Breakfast had the opportunity to support the Pennsylvania Junior Holstein Association by bidding on various items donated for a fun auction. Topping the sale at $1,300 was the winning bid from Paul and Ellen Hartle, center, from Bellefonte for the "Moon Glow" quilt donated by Dave, left, and Phoebe Bitler, right, from Vista Grande Farm. Phoebe pieced the quilt and commissioned her neighbor Alma Snyder to do the hand-quilting. A "to-date" set of Penn State Dairyman's Club milk bottles was donated by Donald Harwood and was purchased by Bob and Jane Pepple for $225. Milk bottles from Keystone and Penn Gate Farms were also up for the highest bid. Several pieces of redware, a clock, several paintings, a coverlet and a wallhanging all helped to bring in a total of $2,520 for Pennsylvania's Holstein Youth.

Uncle Sam May Owe You Money

HONESDALE (Wayne Co.)—How many times have you heard that if something sounds too good to be true it probably is . . . ? Well, here's an exception to the rule.

"Believe it or not, if you are a low-income worker, the federal government wants to give you money," says Debra Bryant, Penn State Cooperative Extension Agent. This is the case whether you worked full-time, part-time, or even only part of the year. This money—the Earned Income Tax Credit (EITC) provides income to workers and their families whether they owe income taxes or not! This tax credit can provide up to $4,140 in added income.

Who's eligible?

•Families with two or more qualifying children and an adjusted gross income of up to $33,178 (or $34,178 if married filing jointly) may be eligible for up to $4,140. This maximum amount is paid to those with incomes between $10,350 and $13,550 (or $14,550 if filing jointly). Lesser amounts are paid to those with incomes on either side of this range.

•Families with only one qualifying child and an adjusted gross income of up to $29,201 (or $30,201 if married filing jointly) may be eligible for up to $2,506. This maximum amount is paid to those with incomes between $7,350 and $13,550 (or $14,550 if filing jointly). Lesser amounts are paid to those with incomes on either side of the range.

•Workers between the ages of 25 and 64 with no qualifying children but with an adjusted gross income of up to $11,060 (or $12,060 if married filing jointly) may be eligible for up to $376. This maximum amount is paid to those with incomes between $4,900 and $6,150 (or $7,150 if filing jointly). Lesser amounts are paid to the rest.

Requirements?

•Must have earned income from wages, salaries, tips, or self-employment.

•Must file a 2002 income tax return to receive the money.

•Must be a U.S. citizen or resident alien for the entire year.

•You and any qualifying children must have a valid Social Security Number.

•Investment income cannot exceed $2,550.

•Cannot file Form 2555 or 2555 EZ, Foreign Earned Income.

What else should I know?

•Non-taxable income +(such as that contributed to qualified retirement plans+) is not included in adjusted gross income.

•Qualifying child may be your natural child, grandchild, stepchild, adopted child, foster child, or sibling if cared for as your child.

•Qualifying child must be under age 19 (age 24 if a full-time student or can be any age if totally and permanently disabled).

•Qualifying child does not have to be your dependent but must have lived with you in the U.S. for more than half of 2002.

•If divorced, either parent can claim a qualifying child (but only one of them can). Several qualifying children of two parents could be divided between them by agreement.

•In cases of joint custody when the parents can't agree, the parent with whom the child lived the longest during the year (or if that is equal, the parent with the highest adjusted gross income) can claim the child.

•Filing for and receiving the earned income tax credit has no effect on certain welfare benefits (including food stamps, low-income housing, supplemental security income, and Medicaid). Temporary assistance to needy families (TANF) benefits may be affected.

To get this credit, you must file a tax return even if you owe no income tax or would not have to file an income tax return otherwise. For more information call (800) TAX-1040 and ask for help with the EIC.

LOST STREAM MAP

The STREAM MAP OF OHIO resembles another map--known to Pennsylvania anglers as the "Lost Stream Map "

The "Stream Map of Pennsylvania" was completed in 1965 after a 30 year effort by Howard Higbee, a former Penn State Professor

Professor Higbee succeeded in creating a map of the highest detail possible a map that shows every stream and lake He painstakingly plotted by hand, the location of 45,000 miles of streams onto a 3 by 5 foot map

The map sold extremely well - until it was lost several years later Incredibly, the printer entrusted with the original drawing and printing plates declared bankruptcy, then carelessly hauled Higbee's 30 years of work to the landfill

The few remaining dog-eared copies became a prized fisherman's possession Professor Higbee was offered $400 for one of his last maps. And state agencies were forced to keep their copies under lock and key.

The experts had always told Professor Higbee that reprints were impossible, because the maps were printed in non-photographic blue

Then, in 1991, at the age of 91, Howard Higbee's dream came true Computers made it possible to reprint the map Holding an updated map, Howard said, "I never thought I'd live to see this day "

Then, by combining Professor Higbee's knowledge with computer technology -- the STREAM MAP OF OHIO was created

Potatoes are America's most popular vegetable, thanks to our love affair with french fries. Baked or boiled, a five-ounce potato is a good source of potassium and offers about 130 calories — not including butter or sour cream.

On the other hand, 10 french fries (frozen, home-prepared in the oven) will add about 420 calories to your meal. A half-cup of homemade mashed ptoatoes prepared with whole milk and butter has about 110 calories.

Whether or not you are concerned about calories, the potato is easily incorporated into any diet.

Here are a few tasty low to no calorie ideas to add flavor to your potato:

- Toasted sesame seeds
- Whipped butter and poppy seeds
- Spoonful of stewed tomatoes and a bit of grated cheese
- Melted butter thinned with lemon juice
- Mix of dried herbs: parsley, chives, basil, dill
- Mock sour cream (cottage cheese and lemon juice whipped in blender)
- Chopped onion with coarsely grated black pepper
- Chive-spiked yogurt

Potato skins are a popular restaurant appetizer, but you can make your own at home by following this recipe from the Potato Board.

CRISP POTATO SKINS

6 medium potatoes (about 2 pounds)
¼ cup melted butter
1 teaspoon soy sauce

Preheat oven to 400 degrees. Scrub potatoes thoroughly and pierce each with a fork. Bake until potatoes are tender, about 45 minutes to 1 hour. Cook, then cut in quarters lengthwise and then in half crosswise to form eight sections. Scoop flesh from skins, leaving ⅛-inch shell. Reserve flesh for use in another recipe.

Increase oven temperature to 500 degrees. Mix together melted butter and soy sauce, and brush on both sides of the skins. Place skings on baking sheet and bake until crisp, about 10-12 minutes.

These can be made ahead and reheated in 400-degree oven for about 8 minutes. Serve sprinkled with corase salt and top as desired.

Note: Uses for scooped potato pulp:

- Mash and season. Add your choice of chopped green pepper and tomato, sliced green onions or shredded cheese. Reheat in a casserole for tomorrow night's dinner.
- Add sauteed onion to potato. Use to fill an omelet.
- Make mashed potato salad using your favorite dressing.
- Mash and stir into soups to thicken.
- Season to taste and form into patties. Dust with flour and saute in butter until browned on both sides.

With organic food sales steadily growing at a 20 percent increase per year over the past decade, there is definitely interest in the area of organic products. But many consumers are confused about exactly what it means when you see the term "organic" on a food label.

It may now become easier to understand in light of new labeling requirements. On October 21, 2002, the U. S. Department of Agriculture announced their new rules for "organic" labeling. Any food labeled "organic" will now have to meet national standards set by the federal government.

The new regulations were developed to ensure the consumer is buying organic food when the label uses the term, and to distinguish to what extent the food product contains organic ingredients. To meet the standards to be labeled "organic," foods must be produced without pesticides, hormones, antibiotics, irradiation or bioengineering. Also, organic farmers are required to conserve soil and water to enhance environmental quality and to treat animals humanely in order to label their products "organic."

Foods that meet the standards can now be labeled in one of four categories. The first is "100 percent organic." This means it must contain 100 percent certified organic ingredients. (The USDA will use state agencies and accredited private companies to inspect and certify companies as organic). This is typically a one-ingredient food, such as fruits, vegetables, milk, meat, and eggs.

Next is the term "organic," which means it contains at least 95 percent organic ingredients. Foods that fit into these two categories (which are at least 95 percent organic) are able to display a new special green USDA organic seal.

The third category is "made with organic ingredients," which means it must contain at least 70 percent organically produced ingredients. No ingredients may be produced using prohibited practices specified in regulations.

The final category is "contains organic ingredients." This term is used to indicate products containing less than 70 percent organically produced ingredients. These products may list organically produced ingredients on the side of the package, but cannot make any claim on the front of the package. It will take some time to see these new labels on the shelves, because the manufacturers have a grace period to sell their existing products first.

These newly established regulations are not meant to endorse that all consumers should eat organic foods, but to provide consumers with consistent information on organic food labels.

A registered dietitian and spokeswoman for the American Dietetic Association, Nelda Mercer, reports that there is no difference in the safety and nutrition between organic and nonorganic food. Toxicologist Dr. Carl Winter, states "scientifically there is no evidence that suggests organic food is safer than conventionally grown food." Although some American consumers do claim that organic foods taste better, it is really a matter of personal preference.

It is also important to remember that the word "organic" on a label does not necessarily mean that the food is healthier for you.

Dietitian Mindy Hermann says, "You can't put your nutrition knowledge on hold and just look for the word "organic." They can make organic doughnuts and organic chips that are just as high in fat and calories as the conventional kind."

For more information on the new organic label regulations, check out the USDA website at: http://www.ams.usda.gov/nop/NOP/standards/LabelReg.html

ANSWER — R. Diehl, Bloomsburg, wanted to know how to make yeast. Thanks to D. Bonnell, Barker, N.Y., for sending the following information:

Commercial yeast is produced by seeding huge vats of a molasses, ammonia, and mineral salts solution with yeast. The resulting tons of yeast are either mashed and compressed or air-dried.

It's unlikely that home preparation could mimic the commercial ideal-growth conditions and produce a reliable yeast.

If cost of yeast is the concern, there are two major alternatives to purchasing the very expensive packets or cubes of yeasts in grocery stores. One is to buy yeast in bulk from a natural foods or small retailer that sells to home bakers. The cost per pound will range between $1.20-$1.40 in contrast with $25 a pound for the commercial brands. Bulk yeast is available from sources on the Internet. Yeast keeps well if refrigerated or frozen.

Bonnell has bought a year's supply and frozen it with successful results. The other alternative is to maintain a starter and bake sourdough breads. A high, airy loaf will still need the addition of about half the usual amount of yeast when a starter is used, although rolls and biscuits do not.

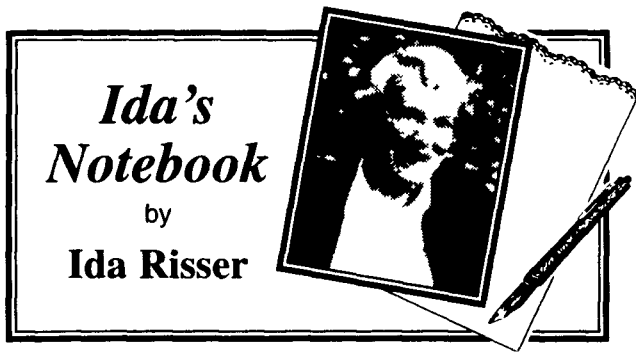
WARNING — Lydia Nolt, New Holland, writes that someone sent a recipe to this column about hardcooking shell eggs. They wrote that when eggs are fresh, add salt to the water, so the eggs shell easier. This part is correct Lydia writes, but the person also recommending watering plants with the egg water. Lydia writes that egg water is fine to use to water plants but if it has salt added to the water, it will kill the plants. She lost plants from watering with the leftover egg water because it had salted in it.



We've had a snowstorm to top most snowstorms and we were snowed in for a few days. Even our driveway was still closed after the road was opened by township plows. The long lane to the farm was closed too as our son and his wife spent a weekend in New Orleans.

Not only did the many heifers have to be fed and watered, but the small animals needed attention. So I drove the three grandchildren to their home so that the dogs, cats, guinea pigs, and lizards would be fed. Then they remembered that the crickets, that were to be fed to the lizards, were at a neighbors and so we picked them up too.

Some of the children visited their friends over the weekend but then, due to the snow, they had to stay overnight and into the next two days. Their parents finally managed to get home in a rented car as the airports were closed.

At least, I had company for a few days as my husband is still in the hospital. He came through the three operations okay but I had a real shock when I was told that he must stay there for six to eight weeks. I could not believe what I was hearing. I'd expected to care for him at home.

My daughter from New Jersey was in London for a week, but our son from Delaware came, and together we visited Allen. Now I hope to visit him when Philip goes to see him in the evening. We can talk on the telephone, which is something that we never did before when he was home. I suppose we'll get through this ordeal eventually.

Apply For Dairy Of Distinction Award By April 15

UNIVERSITY PARK (Centre Co.) — Pennsylvania dairy farms are invited to apply for this year's Dairy of Distinction award from the Northeast Dairy Farm Beautification Program Applications must be submitted by April 15

The award is based on the idea that attractive farmsteads enhance consumer confidence in the wholesomeness of milk and stimulate milk sales and public support for the industry Dairies receiving the highest scores in each of 10 Pennsylvania districts will be awarded an 18- by 24-inch Dairy of Distinction sign to display in front of their farm

"This program is run by volunteers and recognizes the hard work and dedication of dairy producers who promote a positive image for the dairy industry," said Mike O'Connor, secretary of the Pennsylvania Dairy of Distinction program and professor of dairy science extension in Penn State's College of Agricultural Sciences

Roadside judging will take place in May Judges will look at factors that can be controlled by the farmer, such as clean and attractively finished buildings, neat landscaping, ditches, roads and lanes, and well-maintained fences They also will take into account other aspects of the farm, such as cleanliness of animals,the barnyard, feed areas and manure management

Winning farms will be notified in late June Because this is a yearly award, previous winners are reevaluated each year to see if they are still maintaining excellent standards

To receive an application, call Mike O'Connor at (814) 863-3913 or e-mail him at HYPERLINKmail to MOConnor@psu edu

Since 1987, Pennsylvania's Dairy of Distinction Program has recognized more than 700 dairy farms The Pennsylvania program is part of the Northeast Dairy Farm Beautification Program, which also includes New York, New Jersey, and Vermont Dairies in these states can contact the program secretary in their state for applications

HOW IS YOUR FARM SCORED?

Awards will be based upon neatness good maintenance and other factors which can be controlled by the farmer Attractive background scenery should not be weighed heavily in judging All judging observations should be made from a vehicle at one or more points on an adjacent public highway (or if farm is off the road the nearest lane) Judging should give equal consideration to old wood construction and new construction of metal or concrete block

The award program may be used for subsequent advertising or promotion activities for dairy products or dairy farming Farmers who apply for awards agree that, if selected, they will cooperate with these activities and make all reasonable efforts to maintain both the exterior and interior of their properties in an acceptable condition

HOW THE JUDGING WORKS

Judging teams will visit the farms during the month of May Farms will be judged each year as the award is presented on an annual basis Any dairy failing to maintain appearance standards will be asked to remove their sign The Dairy of Distinction signs remain the property of the committee, not the property of the dairy farmer All farms must achieve a compliance score of 90 percent on their Dairy of Distinction score card Your cooperative or milk handler will be contacted to approve your milk quality

RULES FOR THE DAIRY OF DISTINCTION AWARD

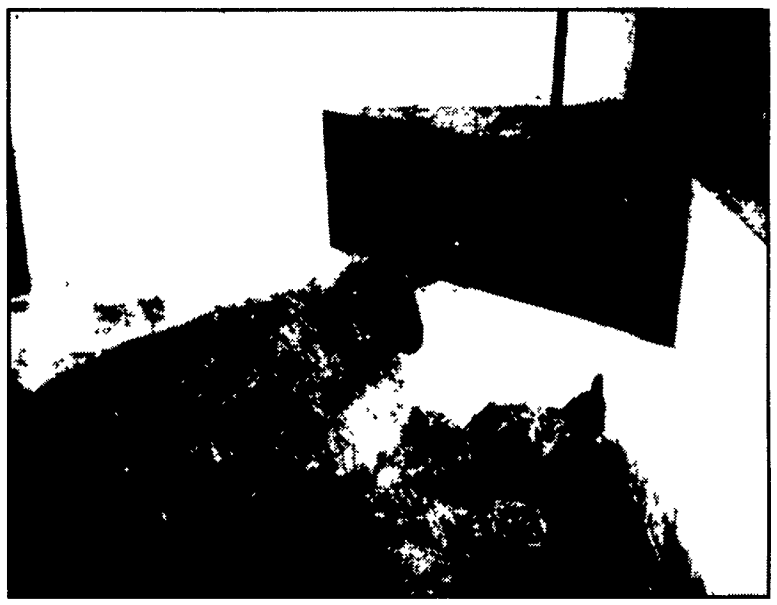
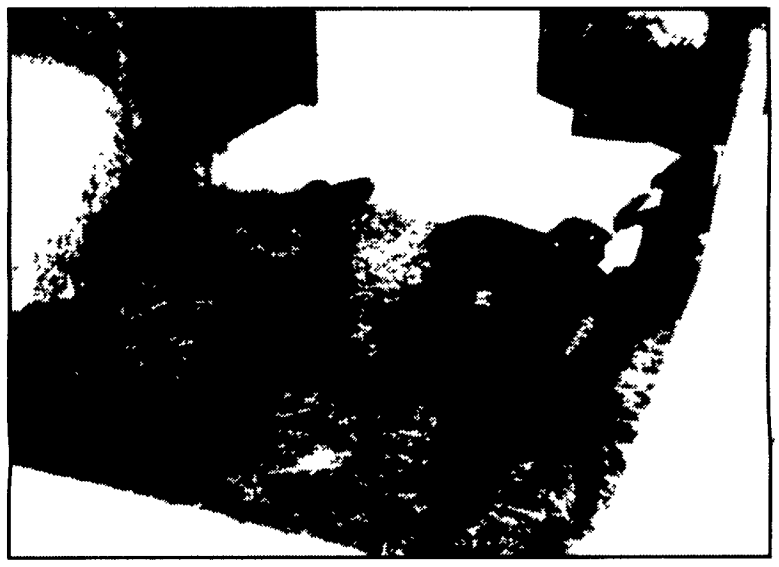
Quad Lambs Born On New Jersey Farm



Quads were born Sunday, Feb. 9, at Main Street Farms, Pattenburg, N.J. Babies ranged in size from 7-13 pounds.



Amy Voorhees bottle feeds the newborn lambs.

EPHRATA (Lancaster Co.) — One of the first signs of spring is the birth of lambs on farms throughout the country.

In Pattenburg, New Jersey, quadruples (four) baby lambs made their debut into the world Feb. 9.

Born on the farm of Don and Chris Voorhees, the babies ranged in size from 7- to 13-pounds. The mother ewe is a six-year-old Suffolk. She needed some help to feed her hungry babies so the Voorhees daughter Amy helps by bottle feeding them.

The lambs are growing well. Three of them are drinking 8-ounces from a bottle three times daily.

The lambs were also placed beneath a heat lamp to provide warmth during the cold, wintry weather.

The Voorhees, who have been raising sheep for 20 years, also have six other ewes and a set of twins born about two weeks before the quads.

Dear Twig: Are there really flying carp?
What would happen if a fish the size of a golden retriever jumped out of the water and clobbered you in the head?
You wouldn't like it. That's what
Your head would hurt
Your sunglasses would break
And you'd sure have some slime to deal with
It's not a pretty picture
But it's exactly what Asian carp are doing to people on the Ohio, Missouri and Mississippi rivers
Asian carp are invading North America. They get up to four feet long. Weigh up to 100 pounds. Eat nearly half their weight each day. And when startled, soar skyward like Sriracha. Sometimes boaters are in the way
Whacko
In fact, Asian carp jump so high — 10 feet or more — that some people, especially those who have been clobbered, call them "flying carp."
Asian carp are a big concern. But not because of the clobbering. They're nearing the Great Lakes. If they get in and spread, they could change the natural ecosystem and wipe out native fish.
And that would clobber us all.

Here Are Some Tax Treats For Parents

HARRISBURG (Dauphin Co.) — With tax time rolling around, Uncle Sam provides some tax benefits for families raising children. For those who qualify, there are credits for child care and college savings plans. However, in order to maximum your savings, you should do some planning and pay careful attention to the rules to avoid tax overpayments.

Tax breaks come in two varieties: credits and deductions. Credits are more beneficial because they actually reduce your tax bill dollar for dollar, while deductions simply reduce your taxable income. The most valuable tax advantages available to parents are: Child Tax Credit, Child Care Tax Credit, Flexible Spending Accounts, Adoption Tax Credit, Deductible Medical Expenses, College Tax-Savings Plans, Hope Scholarship Credit, Lifetime Learning Credit and Student Loan Interest Deduction.

Child Tax Credit

The Child Tax Credit is a dollar-for-dollar reduction in your taxes. Starting in 2001, Uncle Sam granted a $600 tax credit per child younger than age 17 at the end of the year. Through 2004, the tax credit stays at $600. In 2005 through 2008, the credit jumps to $700. In 2009, it becomes $800 and it hits $1,000 by 2010. To receive the credit, the child must qualify as your dependent, have a Social Security number and fall within certain income limitations.

Child Care Tax Credit

One of the best ways for parents to save on taxes is the Child Care Tax Credit that gives working parents a credit for some of their child-care expenses. To claim the credit, your child must be younger than age 13 and your caregiver must be paid on the books: You'll have to provide a Social Security number or taxpayer ID for your caregiver. You also must include on the return the Social Security number of the children receiving the care.

Eligible expenses include: daycare, nursery school, private kindergarten, summer day camp, a licensed toddler program and before- and after-school programs. The cost of household services also can qualify as long as the cost goes at least in part toward the care of the individual.

Special Note: You can't claim this credit if you or your spouse contributes to a dependent care flexible spending account (FSA) at work — it's a one-or-the-other proposition. In addition, qualifying Child Care Credit expenses are limited to the income you or your spouse earns from work, using the figure for whoever earns less. Under this limitation, if one of you has no earned income, you won't be entitled to any credit. There are special rules that essentially remove this limitation for a spouse who's a full-time student or disabled.

Flexible spending accounts

If your employer offers a dependent care flexible spending account, you may wish to consider participation in the FSA instead of taking the Child Care Tax credit. (Remember that you can't use both.) Under a dependent care FSA, you may contribute up to $5,000 on a pretax basis. Your employer withholds the contribution from your paycheck and places it with a plan administrator in a non-interest bearing account. As you incur dependent costs, you submit a statement with the administrator substantiating the cost and receive reimbursement.

However, there are some major drawbacks to dependent care FSAs. First, you deposit money in an FSA on a "use it or lose it" basis. If you don't incur dependent care expenses that equal or exceed the amount in the FSA, you forfeit the surplus. In addition, once you elect to participate and elect the amount withheld, with limited exceptions, you may not change your election. Finally, it often takes several weeks to receive reimbursement for the expenses submitted.

In order to determine what tax benefits you should utilize, consult your tax adviser as there are limitations and rules for both tax credits and deductions.

Consuming Thoughts

Each year more than six million Americans fall prey to food poisoning, according to statistics complied by the Centers for Disease Control (CDC). Usually associated with boust of nausea and diarrhea, food-borne diseases can be serious.

CDC estimates that about 9,000 deaths occur annually as a result of eating contaminated and mishandled foods.

While many types of foods-from meats to salads, even fruit and baked goods-can lead to food poisoning, a frequent culprit is seafood. Fish and shellfish are highly perishable commodities. They are protein foods with a high moisture content that can support the rapid and progressive growth of organisms causing foodborne diseases.

Here are a few suggestions for choosing safe seafood: Buy seafoods at a store or market with a reputation for selling only the best quality fish and shellfish.

Check around and shop only where you feel confident. Consumers run a higher risk of having problems when they deal with an unknown seller. Check to see that fish is stored properly. Fish should be kept in a separate seafood case on a bed of ice.

Fish fillets and steaks should not directly touch the ice, which will leach moisture and flavor. Fish steaks should be displayed in a single layer and fillets stacked no more than two deep on a thin metal tray or on a plastic-film barrier to the ice. Shucked or shelled shellfish meat and peeled, raw or cooked shrimp should not have direct contact with ice, nor should live shellfish be buried in ice. Whole or dressed fish can be on the ice as long as the head end faces downward for proper drainage. Price tags should be wedged in ice or lemons-not in the fish itself.

Use your senses as a guide for determining freshness. When buying whole fish be sure that:

- The eyes are raised and clear
- The color of the fish is bright and shiny
- The area underneath the gill is pink, never brown or green
- The flesh is elastic. When pressed it bounces back, leaving no indentation
- There are no strong or "off" odors. Fresh fish does not have a fishy odor.

Fish fillets and steaks should have moist firm flesh. Clams, oysters and mussels are usually bought live.

The shell should be only slightly opened and will snap shut tightly if tapped. Never buy a clam shell that is fully open and/or doesn't move when touched. Shellfish should come from certified dealers. Live lobsters and crabs should be lively and heavy for their size. Lobster will curl its tail underneath its body when removed from water.

When purchasing frozen seafood, look for products that are solidly frozen. All moisture and vapor proof wrapping should fit tightly. Don't purchase products that are soft, have ice crystals, any sign of discoloration or white patches, which indicate freezer burn.

Fresh seafood should always be cooked. Because of the high incidence of viral foodborne outbreaks caused by eating raw shellfish harvested from polluted waters, Consumers are at risk if they eat raw clams or oysters. Fish should also be cooked. Those who enjoy sushi are also taking a real risk. Since fish is so delicate it should be cooked and eaten as quickly as possible and preferably the same day it's purchased.

Ask your seafood retailer to pack the fish in a plastic bag, then place it in another ice-filled bag. Until cooking, store fresh fish in the refrigerator at a setting of 30-34 degrees. (Check your refrigerator temperature occasionally, using a good thermometer).

Remember that fish must be handled with special care if quality and safety are to be maintained.

Cutting All Carbs Not A Good Idea

COLUMBUS, Ohio — I have an allergy to wheat and dairy products, and I am trying to cut all carbs to help me lose weight. Can you give me a list of foods that contain carbohydrates?

That would be quite a long list. Many foods contain carbohydrates, and most dietitians frown on the idea of taking such radical approaches to the diet. "Everything in moderation" is a good rule of thumb. Extreme measures almost always fail where weight loss is concerned.

With your allergies, you of course must be careful.

The Food and Drug Administration estimates that about 1.5 percent of adults have food allergies, along with 6 percent of children younger than 3. That equates to about 4 million Americans; about 150 die from food allergies each year.

According to the FDA, the most common foods to cause allergies in adults are shrimp, lobster, crab and other shellfish; peanuts; walnuts and other tree nuts; fish; and eggs. In children, eggs, milk, peanuts, soy and wheat are the main culprits.

Children usually outgrow their allergies to milk, egg, soy and wheat, while allergies to peanuts, tree nuts, fish and shrimp usually stay for life. Most adults who have allergies never get rid of them.

Dietitians recommend that people who want to cut down on carbs avoid refined carbs such as white bread, pastas, white rice and sweets.

You're probably already doing a lot of this because of your wheat allergy. On the other hand, incorporating unrefined carbs could be more difficult for you because of the allergy. Still, brown rice, beans, vegetables, fruits, nuts and some cereals are all examples of non-wheat, carb-containing components of a healthful diet. Don't nix them just because you think it might be easier to lose weight.

Stars In Bethlehem

Holstein Convention Women Gather In Historic City

LOU ANN GOOD
Food And Family Features Editor

BETHLEHEM (Northampton Co.) — About 90 women congregated in historic Bethlehem Feb. 27 for the annual Pennsylvania Holstein Convention Ladies Program.

Dr. Leo Frangipane signs books after his presentation challenging women to determine what is most important in life.

Each year, the event is conducted at various sites throughout the state. The activities combine a mix of education, entertainment, inspiration, and shopping.

But most of all, for people like Pat Miller, Harrisburg, it is a time to renew friendships and build new ones with participants who share farm-related interests.

Although historic Bethlehem is well known for its name affiliation to the site of the first Christmas and to Moravian stars, a new type of star appeared in the city Thursday.

"You are the stars of Bethlehem," said Andrea Semmel, program chairperson.

Helping her plan the program were Teresa Davis, Berks County, and Andrea's sister Lisa Semmel, Lebanon County.

Both Lehigh and Northampton counties lay claim to the historic town of Bethlehem. The program began at the Holiday Inn where the Pennsylvania Holstein Convention was conducted. Buses transported the women to the Hotel Bethlehem, where coffee and luncheon were served.

During the morning, the group visited the Moravian Museum, a national landmark. The museum is the oldest building in Bethlehem and is where the Moravians built their community house. (See the Antiques Center for more about the town's history).

Dr. Leo Frangipane, a surgeon for 25 years, challenged the women to focus on the right stuff when dealing with life.

"What is really important?" he asked.

He presented several scenarios of life and death instances. Promises made by those facing death are never to build bigger houses or make more money or to gain more power. Instead, the focus is on relationships, he said.

"We are spiritual beings having a physical experience," Frangipane said of the challenge to understand what life is all about.

Frangipane, a nationally known speaker on issues of wellness and healthcare, said that most disease is caused by attitudes and perspective. He challenges people to laugh often and focus on "the right stuff."

During the afternoon, women explored the many small shops in the historic district.

Elaine Deitrich, Lehigh County, center front, is one of the many Holstein women who attended the program conducted in Hotel Bethlehem.

Pennsylvania Dairy Princess Raechel Kilgore, right, Alternate Rachel Ebert, left, and Alternate Ashley Chapman lead the group in a milk toast.

The youngest person attending the ladies program is 4-month-old Noland, held by his mother Kandy King, Lehigh County.

Dairy farmer Donna Werley, Hamburg, drinks milk even when she is away from the farm.

Experience Early Moravian Settlement's Rich History

LOU ANN GOOD
Food And Family
Features Editor

BETHLEHEM (Lehigh Co.) — "All these fabulous pieces — I'd love to have them in my home," said Linda Miller, one of the persons who participated in the women's tour of Historic Bethlehem.

She was referring to the furnishings in the oldest building in Bethlehem — the 1741 Gemeinhaus.

But the pieces are not for sale. Neither are guests able to photograph the interior nor the many fascinating furnishings within its walls.

When Miller and other visitors entered the building now known as the Moravian Museum of Bethlehem, it was like a step back in time. The 12 rooms of the former Gemeinhaus still contain many of the original pieces that the Moravian missionaries used in their daily lives.

The Moravians came to the new world to evangelize the native Indians. The Moravians also excelled in education and musical training. They are said to have written more hymns than all other Protestants groups combined in the whole world. The Moravians were the first to translate the Bible in the language of the people.

The early Moravian settlement built the five-level house now used as the museum to house up to 80 people at one time. The kitchen area was in the basement level. The second floor or the street level held offices and living space, the third floor was where church services were conducted, the fourth floor housed the dormitories, and the attic was the fifth floor.

Later the Moravians built more houses to meet the demands of their growing settlement.

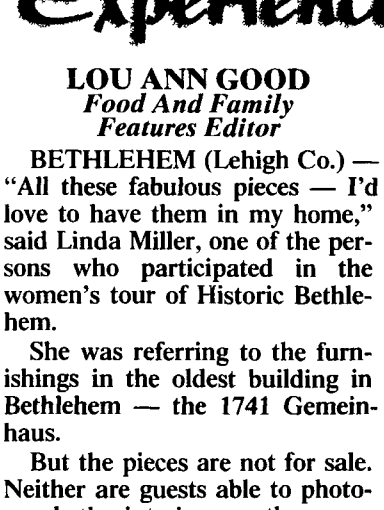
A tour of the museum offers a glimpse of the fascinating history of Pennsylvania's Bethlehem, considered a closed community to anyone outside the Moravian faith until 1845.

Unlike the majority of people during that era, the Moravians believed in the equality of men and women. They established the first girl's school in America in 1742.

Their artisans employed advanced technologies from their native Europe. About half of the settlement worked to enable the others to pursue missionary goals.

As the group multiplied, houses were erected for single brothers, single sisters, and married people. Most of these buildings are part of the historic town and available for tour. Seven acres of the original farm are being developed as a living history museum to interpret farming between 1748-1848, a time of great change in agriculture methods. The colonial industrial quarter shows the ingenious inventions of the Moravians as they developed industry to support the community.

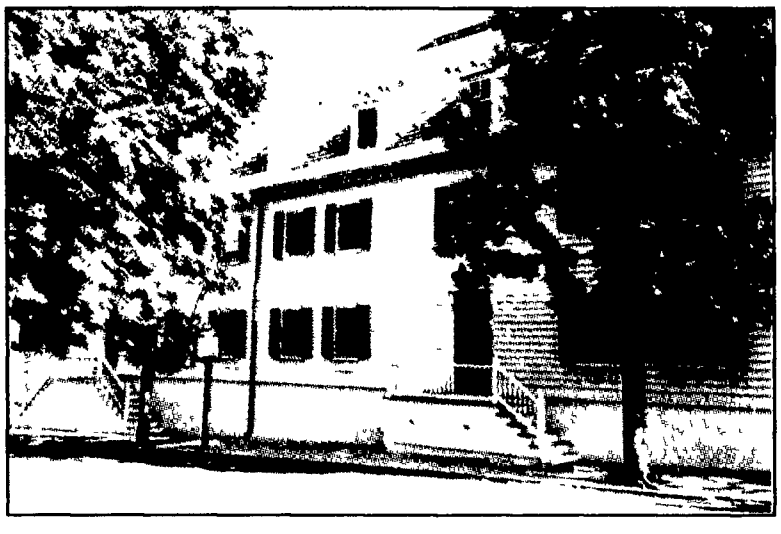
For more information about Historic Bethlehem, call (610) 882-0450 or visit the Website, www.historicbethlehem.org.



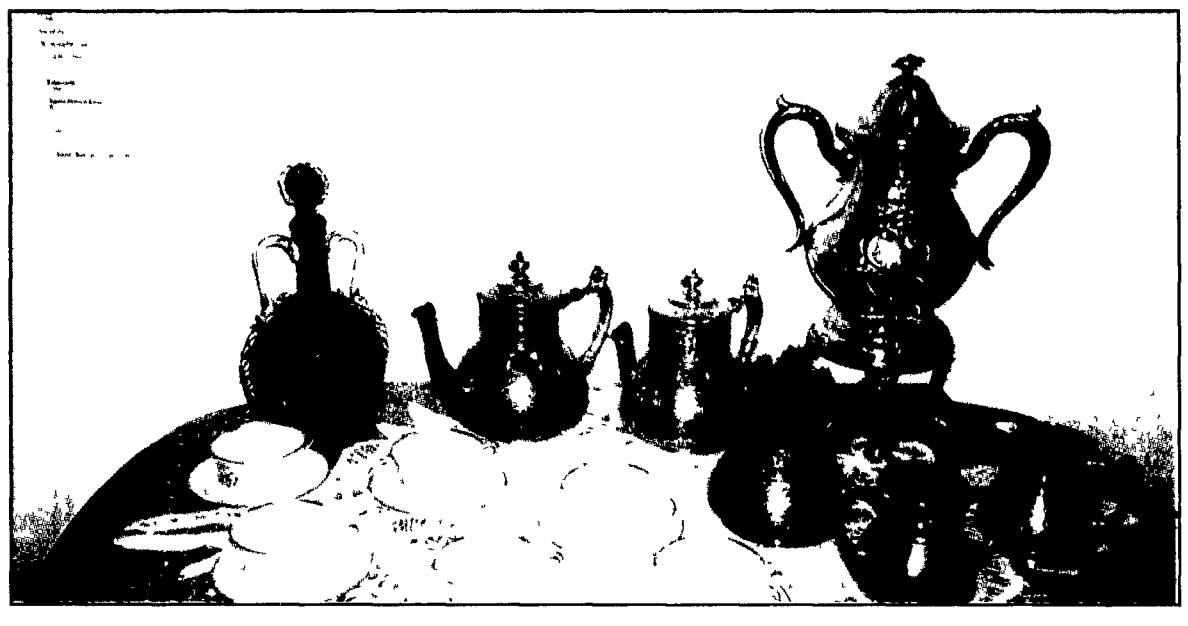
Although Linda Miller, Harrisburg, prefers the furnishings found in the Gemeinhaus, this rocker discovered in a nearby Bethlehem antiques shop is much more affordable.

The Pilgrim Room, where temporary guests stayed, is one the 12 rooms that shows how the Moravian mission was furnished in the 18th Century.

Items used in the everyday preparation of food takes visitors back in time.



The 1741 Gemeinhaus, Moravian Museum of Bethlehem, is one of the largest 18th century log structures in the U.S. Twelve exhibit rooms depict the life of Bethlehem's early Moravian settlers.



Early settlements were thought to be sparse and primitive. But the Moravians appreciated intricate decorations and had some fine collections of silver and china that they brought to the new world.

Beds One Of The Earliest Status Symbols

These days we take our beds for granted. Just about everybody has one whether plain or fancy.

Would you believe beds were once a symbol of wealth and power? And, early examples weren't often very comfortable. Not even for Persian potentates.

By the 18th and 19th centuries the bed had come a long way. Not only for comfort but design. When they come to auction they can be pricey. What counts now are design, age and maker. An elaborate Victorian four poster bed can sell at auction for more than $5,000.

Even a 20th century reproduction can do well. This happened when a pair of twin size, Sheraton style carved pineapple post beds fetched $1,092.50 at a January, James Julia auction.

Ancient drawings show that beds in Egypt, Persia, Greece and Rome were simple structures of stone, softened with animal skins and textiles. However, they were lavished with inlays or appliques of metals and ivory.

In Greece and Rome the bed frames were high. For the wealthy and royalty, headboards were inlaid with gold, silver and bronze.

Not so lucky were the Northern Europeans during those times. Their beds were piles of leaves on the floor, covered with skins. By the middle ages the mattress was invented. It was stuffed with feathers, wool or hair. The bed was on it's way to becoming an object of importance.

Bedsteads have always followed the prevailing taste of their time.

Before the reign of Queen Anne in England, some stood as high as 11 feet, along with massive court cupboards. There was a practical reason as well as aesthetic for the heavily, velvet draped, cornice-canopy. Drapery kept out the cold air.

In France at the same time, huge bed frames were engulfed in costly fabrics. Even though beds became lighter and simpler by the the 18th century, it was their designers who made them important. In England, costly were beds made by noted designers Chippendale, Hepplewhite, Adams, and Sharaton.

American headboard styles began radical changes in the 1860s evolving from the four poster and baluster styles. During the era of the rococco revival headboards became higher and were often covered with a partial wood canopy frame and drapery. By the 1880s-1890s, the canopy frame had disappeared and the headboard was even higher, towering and heavy in appearance. Among the woods favored was golden oak. Decorations were applied or carved in the more expensive pieces. They were often part of a bedroom suite.

By the end of the 19th century into the early 20th, the swirling lines of the Art Nouveau style dictated the look. It was followed by the stark, sparse lines of Arts and Crafts style.

A radical change in both the appearance and materials came with the introduction of the Art Deco style to America in the 1920s. Headboards became low. The favored materials were walnut and oak. The more expensive beds (and bedroom suites) were combined wood with aluminum, ivory, black lacquer, ebony and chrome.

The 1940s-1950s Modernism movement brought yet more changes to the bed. Molded plywood and plastics gave it a different look. It was also the time when the platform bed was introduced. Sculptured acrylics were often combined with exotic woods.

CLUES: If you want to know what the next "hot" bed fashion will be, pay attention to the expensive furniture ads. A few years ago there was a revival of the 19th century Empire "sleigh" bed. Copies and reproductions were popular for five years.

While most of the early styles have been reproduced, a possible exception could be the late Victorian massive headboards. However, with all of the carved furniture repros coming here from Indonesia I could be wrong. Look for circular saw marks that would be on authentic late 19th century pieces, and signs of wear. Otherwise be happy with a finely carved reproduction.

Antique Engines Steal The Show At Sigmon Closeout Auction

AUBURN, Ind. — Antique engines and locomotives were the hot items when Kruse International auctioned off the holdings of the Sigmon Museum Closeout Auction in Newton, North Carolina on February 8-9.

As the complete closeout of a lifelong collection, the event was expected to be one of the area's largest auctions of the year, with thousands of items crossing the auction block at no reserve. Items available included steam engines, hit and miss engines, antique farm equipment, collector cars, carriages, furniture, amusement rides, and many more collectibles.

One of the standout items in the sale is the famous Lansing Double Traction, the world's oldest 4-wheel drive. Out of three prototypes, it is the only surviving one. It sold for $30,000.

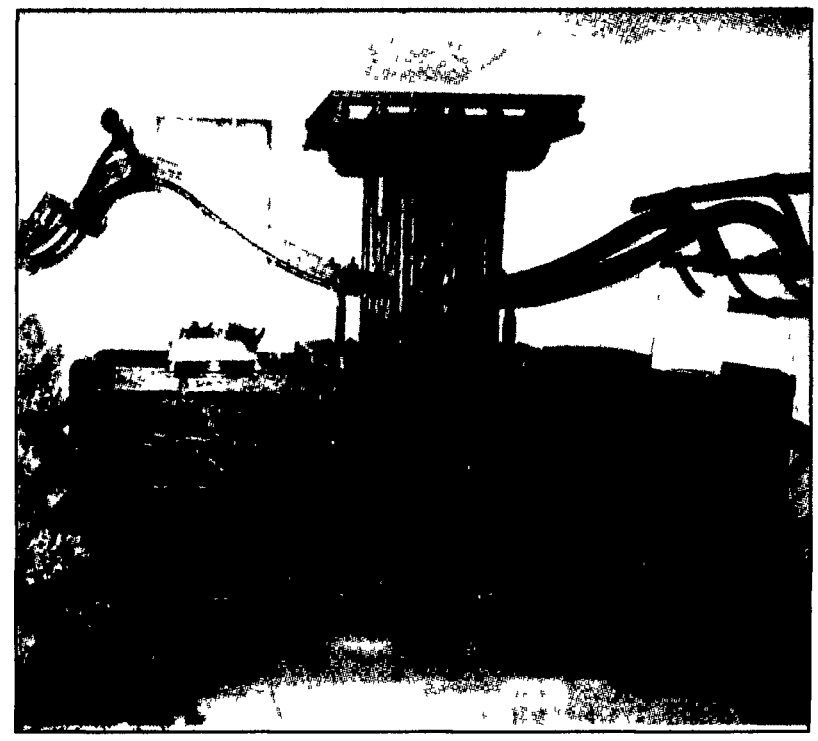
The item that drew the highest bid was a Statesville 4x6x2 grand scale train steam locomotive that is fully operational and includes the engine tender car and the passenger car. The winning bid for the locomotive was $38,000.

Other interesting items sold included the following:

Mogul 4-horsepower screen cooled stationary engine for $16,000; miniature gas-powered train modeled after the F-7 General Motors diesel locomotive. The train also included two 12-passenger cars and the engine and sold for $22,500; custom-made Rumley oil pull tractor with 3-horsepower McCormick Deering 600 rpm engine which sold for $15,000; antique child-size barber chair for $3,800; Studebaker farmer's wagon for $2,100; steam boat whistle which sold for $3,600; antique Coca Cola bottle mold for $600; and a bear trap which went to the highest bidder for $900.

"I'm extremely pleased with the results of this auction. Despite the unseasonably cold weather, we had a good turnout and some pretty heated bidding. 'Big Edd' Sigmon had an incredible collection, and I think that the prices that some of these items drew reflect that," said Dean Kruse, founder and CEO of Kruse International.

There was a very large contingency of bidders on the Internet bidding. More than 740 people registered to participate online and 136 different people actually won items on eBay. Kruse International is the world's leading auction firm for collector cars and also conducts real estate and equipment auctions. For more information, visit www.kruse.com.



This 1792 fire engine is on display at the Moravian Museum, Bethlehem.

Betty the beautiful bride

Antiques Questions And Answers

I bought this doll for my daughter in 1950, 51. The box is marked "Betty the beautiful bride". All original clothes. Is there a current value on this doll?

S.K. - Creighton, PA

Research on the internet shows your doll was made by Deluxe Premium Corp., a division of Deluxe Reading, Topper Toys. They went out of business in 1972. Your doll could sell in a shop for $100 or more.

I would like to know the value of this painting of island people signed P. Gauguin, 91. It is on paper and the paint can be removed with a dampened Q-tip. It appears to be oil paint. I found it years ago in on the floor of a basement in an antique shop.

M.W. - Norwalk, WI

It is possible you have an undiscovered oil painting by French artist Paul Gauguin, worth thousands. You might start by contacting a museum curator of 19th century European Art at your closest large museum, in your case The Art Institute of Chicago. If authentic they can further advise you.

This painting of island people is signed P. Gauguin, 91.

EARLY PENNA. GERMAN LOG FARM HOUSE AND BARN
Circa 1765-75

Located on a quiet 2¼ acre lot with spring and pasture on a maintained street in the historic community of Schaefferstown, Penna., this early dovetailed log home presents evidence of a large 11 foot fireplace with a central chimney. An extremely rare and unusual feature includes evidence of paint decorated interior logs and chinking. The second floor provides wide oak flooring and evidence of an unusual "sleep-closet" beside the massive fireplace chimney. Four rooms made up the original 18th century portion of the house with a later, perhaps also a late 18th century, addition. A pleasant semi-attached summer house completes the dwelling.

A pleasant Penna German 3 bay stone end bank barn with a thrashing floor and 2 mows on the upper level is neatly situated on a gentle rise of the lot.

The 2¼ acre site supports a spring and pasture. The property, bordering Historic Schaefferstown, is ready for restoration by anyone wanting to restore an 18th century log home with evidence of unique and hard to find features.

TERMS: 10% down on day of auction, balance due in 45 days at Final Settlement

❖ Business News ❖

AGRI-INC. Changes Name To ACI Construction

EPHRATA (Lancaster Co.)—ACI Construction, formally known as AGRI-INC., recently announced that the company would officially be operating under the new name ACI Construction with AGRI-INC. retained as the parent corporate entity

J. Daniel Buch, president of ACI Construction said, "In changing our name we wanted to find a name which expanded our identity in the construction business beyond the agricultural community. Currently the greater portion of our client base is focused on commercial and industrial, retail, office facilities and church construction in the southeastern Pennsylvania region."

Over twenty employees make up the ACI Construction work force and several of the experienced staff has been with the company since 1968 when AGRI-INC. was founded.

New construction projects include a 26,500 sq. ft. two-story meat processing and warehouse addition for John F. Martin & Sons, Inc. in Lancaster County; and recently Spring Run Associates in Coatesville contracted ACI for construction of a 5,000 sq. ft. one-story community center with a projected completion date of May 2003. Both of these projects are typical design build relationships ACI forms with its clientele.

ACI has established a reputation for high standards and quality construction over the years with relationships based on the Design Build concept. Business owners have found this method fulfills their primary goals with less time involvement, and project completions are better controlled within budget guidelines and on-time schedules.

For over twenty years, ACI Construction has been the regional authorized dealer of Ceco Building Systems, a leader in the pre-engineered steel building industry.

Tammy Nichols Joins Agway Feed & Nutrition

SHIPPENSBURG—Agway Feed and Nutrition has named Tammy Nichols as a dairy nutrition specialist in southwestern Pennsylvania. She works with dairy farmers in Fayette, Somerset, and Westmoreland counties.

Nichols, of Confluence, is a graduate of Penn State University with a B.S. in Animal Science and a focus on dairy production.

Since 1995, Nichols has enhanced her academic training by holding various positions on Northeast progressive dairy farms. Last spring, she participated in the North American Intercollegiate Dairy Challenge at Michigan State University.

Gardner Named Dairy Sales Manager For Agway Feed And Nutrition

SHIPPENSBURG (Cumberland Co.) — Charles E. Gardner, DVM, MBA, has been named Agway Feed and Nutrition's dairy sales manager for eastern Pennsylvania.

The announcement was made by Frank A. Ziacik Jr., vice president of marketing and sales for Agway Feed and Nutrition.

Gardner brings strong dairy and business credentials, including 26 years of experience as a veterinarian in private practice, to his role directing the eastern Pennsylvania sales force. He has been with Agway since 1999 as the director of the company's Tested-Specific Pathogen Free heifer program, which he will continue to supervise.

"Charlie is well-respected and well-known by dairy producers throughout the Northeast," Ziacik said. "Both our customers and our sales staff will benefit from his knowledge."

Gardner is a frequent speaker on both herd health management and dairy farm business practices. Last month, he was a featured speaker on youngstock health at the Fifth International Dairy Housing Conference in Fort Worth, Texas. In November, Gardner spoke at two Agway-sponsored educational seminars, lecturing on employee management at the Agway Certified Dairy Herd Manager seminar and discussing the intricacies of asset transfer at the Family Farm seminars.

Gardner, a resident of Orefield, received his DVM from Cornell University and an MBA from Moravian College.

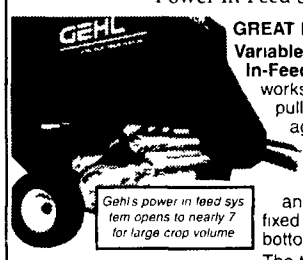
GEHL. MODEL RB 2580

ROUND BALERS

Featuring the ALL-NEW Variable Open-Throat Power In-Feed System



Gehl's power in feed system opens to nearly 7 for large crop volume

GREAT BALING STARTS HERE

Variable Open-Throat Power In-Feed System Here's how it works The incoming crop is pulled off the pickup by the aggressive action of two power in feed rolls – a 6-inch diameter pivoting power in feed roll on top and an 8-inch diameter fixed power in-feed roll on the bottom

The top pivoting power in feed roll rides over the crop as it is pulled into the bale chamber An extension spring keeps the toproll under constant downward force

The spring tension increases as the variable throat opens from a minimum of 3/4 of an inch up to a maximum opening of nearly 7 inches

The constant downward force of the pivoting upper powered in feed roll in combination with the fixed lower in-feed roll both turning inward pinches the crop and forces it into the bale chamber The stripping roll strips crop off the belt and forces it down to the incoming crop Adjustable scrapers on the stripping roll and pivoting roll eliminate buildup

THREE-BALL TWINE BOX. Gehl balers are designed to keep you going all day long with six-ball twine storage They're located in full-size doors that open to provide easy access to baler components like an optional chain oiler system or the Total Density Control adjustments

GAUGE WHEELS. Allow the pickup to follow field contours while keeping tines out of the dirt That saves wear and tear on the pickup and means less dirt in your bale Gauge wheels are standard equipment with the wide pickup and an option with some others

BELTS. Deluxe balers feature chevron belts (pictured above) with heavy duty, plate-type belt lacing The belts are 6-1/2 inches wide for closer spacing between belts and less space between the belts and side sheets Belts are configured in a staggered pattern to minimize trash build-up

BEEF TIPS

The American Simmental Association's Junior program emphasizes education Instead of concentrating on the show ring aspects of the industry, as most other breeds do, ASA focuses on such learning experiences as public speaking, marketing and sales use of the sire summary and herd management issues Exhibition and showmanship are significant but not overriding other parts of the overall learning experience

GRANTVILLE (Dauphin Co.) — Even though snow still has an icy grip on Pennsylvania, producers couldn't help thinking about spring planting and next year's crop as they gathered recently at the Holiday Inn in Grantville for the 2003 Corn and Soybean Conference.

Top placings in the classes are in a related story on this page.

More than 100 producers and industry representatives attended the event sponsored by the Pennsylvania Corn Growers Association, the Pennsylvania Soybean Board, and Penn State Cooperative Extension.

Dr. Peter Bordi, assistant professor, School of Hotel, Restaurant, and Recreation Management, Penn State, discussed a soy recovery drink developed on funds from Pennsylvania Soybean Promotion Board grant.

After the product was developed and tested (a process that took 15 months), it was moved on to consumer testing. The university's football team was picked as the group of consumers to try the product.

After practice, researchers asked the players opinions of the drink, which resembles a chocolate milkshake, according to Bordi. "The players actually developed the drink — they told us what they liked and didn't like," he said.

By NCAA rules, the drink could be no more than 30 percent protein. Pasteurized as Penn States Creamery, it has a shelf life of 30-45 days.

Besides taste, health benefits were also an important part of the project. Researchers gathered weight data, measured dietary intake, and took blood and urine samples. They also asked the players to rate their pain on a numerical scale.

Kyle Henninger, left, won the shelled corn no-till contest with 223.7 bushels per acre. With the win, Henninger will go to the Commodity Classic in Charlotte, N.C. Last year Henninger won first place in both the Pennsylvania and national shelled corn no-till classes. Herman Manbeck, Womelsdorf, had a third in the shelled corn no-till class.

GRANTVILLE (Dauphin Co.) — The recent Pennsylvania Corn and Soybean Conference drew approximately 125 producers and industry representatives to a one-day event conducted here at the Holiday Inn.

The Pennsylvania Corn Growers Association (PCGA), Pennsylvania Soybean Board, and Penn State Cooperative Extension sponsored the event.

Contest results are also a highlight of the conference. There were 67 participants in the Five-Acre Corn Club contests, according to Greg Roth, corn management research, and extension, Penn State.

In the three-year average (2000-2002) classes, awards went to:

MILLERSTOWN (Perry Co.) — Driving by sight and relying on disk marks and foam will be a thing of the past for farmers who opt to use digital technology to guide their field equipment.

Using the traditional foam marker may prove to be challenging at times, said Calvin Eby, assistant service manager at Hoober Inc.

MOVING OUR INDUSTRY FORWARD WITH PARTNERSHIPS

I do a lot of traveling around the region and the state, and I continue to hear many producers and industry folks ask what we need to be doing to move our corn and grain industry ahead in Pennsylvania in these trying times.

I think we are starting to make progress, but it's difficult to achieve much by working alone.

Many of us believe that just by working harder each day we can accomplish our goals, but I'm finding that by working together in partnerships among industry, university, producers, and government, we can achieve things that one group cannot achieve alone.

I've seen numerous examples of this starting to happen in other regions and now starting to happen in our industry here in Pennsylvania as Players gave positive feedback on the drink and reported lowered soreness and increased energy. They also did not experience the drastic weight drops that may characterize preseason workouts, reported Bordi.

Health benefits, said Bordi, go beyond soreness and body recovery. Oxidant stress during exercise may contribute to fatigue and muscle injury, and "we strongly believe soy really reduces this," he said.

As for the future of the drink, "we're looking to have it bottled and hope that next year we can make it available to all the sports teams at Penn State," he said.

Ray Leiby, quality assurance, Wenger Feed Mill, Inc., discussed grain quality during his presentation.

Quality grains will not have a musty, sour, foreign odor, damaged kernels, or have foreign materials, said Leiby. This ensures the proper formulation of diets.

Grain accounts for 60 percent of the formulation, "so it can have a significant impact on the final ration," he said.

The business accepts 15.5 percent maximum moisture for corn and 14 percent for soybeans. A sieve is used to test for foreign material.

Random samples are taken to the laboratory for nutritional analysis. "We also test for molds and mycotoxins, and forward to another lab for amino acid profiles," said Leiby.

Grain spoilage is the result of microorganisms using a grains nutrients for grown and the reproductive process. However "molds don't tend to attack good, sound grain," he said.

According to Leiby, if sound grains are harvested and kept a low moisture and low temperature, they may retain their original processing quality and even original viability for many years.

Leiby also spoke about the advantage of genetically modified organisms (GMOs). He expects to see an increase in consumer confidence in GMOs.

Larry Hepner, department chair, development of agronomy and environmental science, Delaware Valley College, told the college's experience of growing corn for an unusual market: Hollywood.

The college rented ground to Disney for the movie "Signs," a movie about visitors from outer space that left crop circles in a cornfield.

Since the corn was valued for its aesthetic, rather than productive value, this year's crop posed unusual challenges, according to Hepner.

The first challenge was that the film crew wanted to shoot the move from September 15 to October 15 — a time when Pennsylvania's corn is traditionally already harvested.

Consequently, DelVal pulled up the young, already-growing corn and replanted in the first week of June so that it would be maturing and green for the movie.

"We were also trying to grow corn through the driest part of the summer," he said. Consequently, the DelVal team designed an irrigation system for the 80-acre farm.

"We worked for a month to get everything set up," said Hepner.

The system included a center pivot and drip tape. Effluent was taken from a wastewater treatment plant. Newly-installed pipe mains fed the 100 miles of drip tape that traveled down every other row of corn.

"The wastewater did a very efficient job for us in growing out the corn," said Hepner.

Employees from a firm in California took two-by-four boards to create the crop circle pattern in the field.

"Our other fear was killing frost," said Hepner.

In fact, in the final week or shooting the area had three days of frost. However with the addition of green paint for the first three rows of corn, the last scenes were completed.

"It was a fun summer," said Hepner, "but there are practical applications we hope we can take from it." DelVal purchased the irrigation system from Disney to look at wastewater use for irrigation.

Marcia Zarley-Taylor, editor, "Top Producer," presented "Brazil: The Competitor You Can't Ignore."

From her first trip to Brazil in 1998, Zarley-Taylor was impressed with the rapidly changing country.

She has since spent several years researching "how Brazil's production affects our competitiveness on the world market. Their production capacity will change the way we look at the world.

"It's not soil, it's water that is making crops," said Zaley-Tayor.

In addition, "over the last 25-30 years, their scientists have definitely proven that it's not soil quality that counts. They're making soil in South America."

In the 1970s producers and scientists discovered that using phosphorus and other elements could correct the soil that has an organic content of one percent.

The southern part of the country, long considered the agrarian area, is now joined by the "Cerrado" savannah area in the middle — an area that was previously considered wasteland.

Recently the USDA released a scientific study that revealed that with improved transport, capital investment, and technology, Brazil could bring 420 million acres into production.

"What this means is that we have overlooked a continent — and this isn't marginally productive land," she said.

"The U.S. has been asleep at the switch, really not expecting that wed have to compete in the world market."

Because grain prices are so low, Brazil is also looking into poultry and swine production, she said.

U.S. producers need to "keep costs low beyond the farm gate all the way through — everything possible to help agriculture stay competitive."

First-class transport systems are also important, according to Zarley-Taylor.

"I can't believe that we've spent ten years debating about the locks and dams on the Mississippi River. If we want to stay competitive, it's an automatic."

She also urged American producers to capitalize on value-added options, since Brazil is dealing mostly in bulk.

"The challenge for us to realize is that the world has changed drastically. As we look into the future, we really need to develop strategies on how to cope with this," she said.

The afternoon program included speakers Sam Willet, director, public policy, National Grown Growers Association, and John Berry, ag marketing educator, Penn State Cooperative Extension, Lehigh County. The men discussed how to make the most of the Farm Bill.

A panel including Cliff Parker, RMA, director, Raleigh regional office; Gene Gantz, Ag Risk Strategies, Inc.; Rita McMullen, Stine, Davis, and Peck Insurance; and Kris Weaver, Morrissey Insurance Inc., discussed crop insurance.

well. I am writing this in Canada where I am attending a conference on corn breeding. The Canadians have problems with ear rot in corn, affecting the feed and export potential of their crop. Several presentations here have related how they have pulled together producer, industry, university, and government support to tackle this problem. They are making real progress at understanding the mechanisms behind ear rot and developing transgenic lines that are showing some potential for resistance to the problem.

Here in Pennsylvania, I've seen a similar effort happen with crop insurance. Industry representatives, corn producers, Pennsylvania Department of Agriculture, and Penn State have worked together to make crop insurance more attractive and increased enrollment dramatically.

Gene Gantz reported at our Corn and Soybean Conference this year that crop insurance has resulted in $50-60 million being pumped into our rural economy this year, with potential for even more if we had had more sign-up. This is one example of how these partnerships can work to put dollars in your pocket.

I see similar relationships possible in other areas. In the ethanol plant development efforts that are happening around the state, for example, I have seen some good examples of this kind of partnering going on. Partnership efforts are under way to assess the feasibility and discuss the issues surrounding the development of that market for corn. That is good.

Recently, in our department, we initiated corn hybrid silage testing program with dairy producers and the support of industry. This has been a good example of a partnership between industry, producers, and the university to work at making us more competitive.

At our recent Corn and Soybean Conference, Marcia Taylor told us we need to be more aggressive about maintaining a competitive animal industry to support our current basis in corn. Otherwise, livestock production may move to South America and take our corn markets with them. Here's another opportunity for work in a partnership mode that seems to have worked on other issues.

I also believe that we need more partnerships to develop better hybrids and production strategies adapted to our region to create added value opportunities for grain producers. Seed companies or Penn State can't do it alone. We need the industry/government/university/producer partnerships to make this work, too.

We also heard at our conference that "the world is run by folks who show up." Get involved. Bring some new ideas forward. Help develop some partnerships. Let's get the ball rolling.

As producers, network with the leadership in our Pennsylvania Corn Growers Association and other farm groups to build new markets for our crops and help to address some of our specific issues here in the state. As industry, government, or in university-folks, look to pitch in to make things happen. And remember that key word: partnerships.

Risk-Assessed Marketing Workshop March 5

WATSONTOWN (Northumberland Co.) — A risk-assessed marketing workshop will be offered March 5 here at the Watson Inn. The nationally renowned economist Art Barnaby from Kansas State University will give a seminar on how to develop and implement a marketing plan.

This will be a "hands-on" workshop, so participants will want to bring a sharp pencil and a calculator. The cost of the workshop is $10, which includes lunch.

Light Bars Guide Crop Planting

Foam markers are hard to see when it is dark or foggy. Additionally when an operator sprays standing crops the foam can fall down between the plants, also making it hard to see.

Also, foam markers will not work when temperatures are below freezing.

Consequently new technology using satellites and the Global Positioning System (GPS) is a welcome addition for crop producers.

Producers now use "light bars," which get their readings from GPS satellites through an antenna mounted on the roof to calculate their position. They then "drive by the box," which tells how the equipment operator how to steer through the field.

The driver's current position is visible by the horizontal line of green, red, and yellow lights. The steering guide looks ahead and displays heading instructions. The operator moves the steering wheel to match the indication.

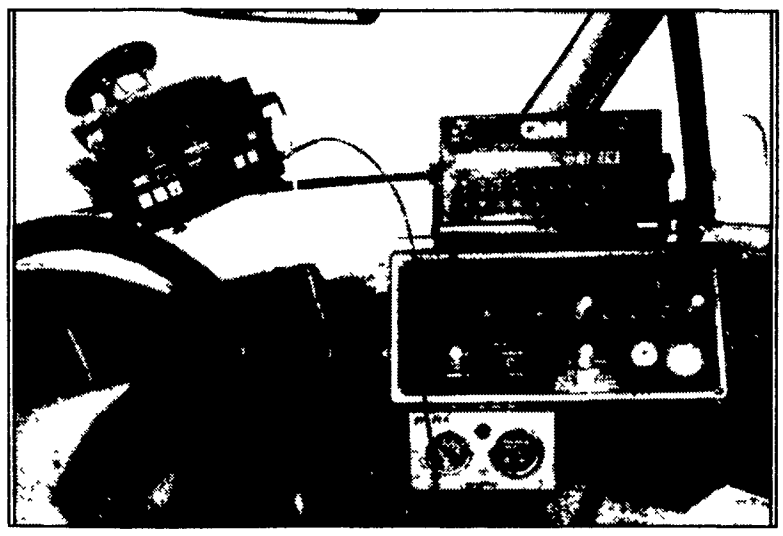
The driver then is looking forward, "instead of looking back all the time," said Eby.

The system, easily moved from one machine to another, is usable for fertilizing, spreading, spraying, tillage, planting, and combining.

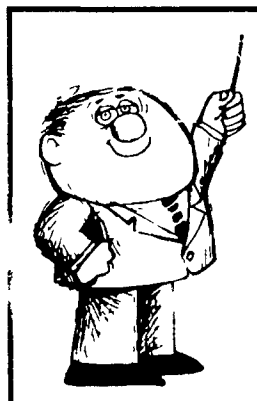
Besides giving information that sends a machine on a straight line, the system can also guide the machine in a contoured line. On the first pass, the system does not guide but records information, then uses that information to guide the user alongside the previous pass.

There are four components to the system, said Eby — an antenna, which mounts on the roof or hood, the light bar display in the cab that attaches to the dash or windshield, and two cables, one connecting the antenna to the lightbar display, and another connecting the light bar display to the power server.

Producers can expect to pay about $4,000 for the system.



The steering system (right) is easily moved from one machine to another.



A lesson well learned...

PCGA Announces Results Of 5-Acre Corn Club Contest

This year was one of the most difficult to grow high corn yields that we have had in many years The year ranged from too cold and wet and then too hot and dry. Despite the weather, some club members this year were able to produce some very high yields including two reports over 200 bushels/acre. That critical rainfall in late July and August that most folks missed apparently made the difference. As expected, our entries were down this year, but we still managed to record 67 entrants. Production practice trends were similar to previous years, but producers reported more barren and down plants than usual Our club members have again demonstrated that high yields of corn can be produced in an environmentally sound way

This is the first year we are back to a full complement of three-year awards for all of our classes Winners in these classes represent the ability to produce high yields consistently

Many thanks are due to the extension agents and crop consultants who help collect the yield and cultural information for the club. Also, many thanks are due to Mark Antle in the Department of Crop and Soil Sciences for his diligent work in pulling this report together.

NCG Plants Roots

ST LOUIS, Mo. — The National Corn Growers Association (NCGA), which represents the nation s corn growers, is starting its fiscal year on a high note and is relocating o new facilities in west St. Louis County.

The move represents the first time in the organization's 45-year history it will own its headquarters instead of leasing the property as it has in the past. NCGA Chairman Tim Hume said there are many reasons for the move

"A primary reason is the fact we will actually own this building," he said "The corn growers who provide the funds for our base of operations through their checkoff dollars want to see more equity and we can't provide that by renting a space By owning the facility, they will see a return on their investment "

NCGA is a national organization founded in 1957 and represents more than 32,000 dues-paying corn growers from 48 states In 1984, leaders moved the headquarters from Iowa and established a national office in St. Louis. NCGA also maintains an office in Washington, D.C.

"NCGA represents the interests of more than 300,000 farmers who contribute to corn checkoff programs in 21 states," said Rick Tolman, NCGA's chief executive officer.

The new building will also provide many benefits to the staff, said Hume, including an increase in space, from approximately 6,800 square feet to 10,000 square feet in the new location

The new contact information is National Corn Growers Association, 632 Cepi Drive, Chesterfield, MO 63005, (636) 733-9004, (636) 733-9005.

Want a smooth operating machine this spring?

Deer Creek Can Help!

Did you know?
• If 1 seed out of 12 is incorrectly planted, that represents 8% of your total crop. For a 150 bushel per acre crop, this represents 12 bushels lost per acre. Over 500 acres, this equals 6000 bushels that were lost.

Did you know?
• If you plant a double every 12 seeds, that represents over 8% of extra seed. If a bushel would plant 2 ½ acres, the cost of the seed per acre would be $40 per acre at $100 per bushel. That 8% extra seed would then equal $3.20 wasted every acre costing you $1,600 for 500 acres.

Did you know?
• A planter travels 88 inches per second at 5 mph, or 3/12 inches in 1/25 of a second. If there were a delay of 1/25 of a second in the meter caused by poor maintenance or operation, the seed spacing would be off 3 ½ inches.

Don't wait until it's too late
Take care of your maintenance needs now!

NCGA, Divergence, Inc. Collaborate To Help Increase Yields

ST. LOUIS, Mo. — The National Corn Growers Association (NCGA) and Divergence, Inc. announced a research collaboration focused on the control of parasitic nematodes (roundworms) that plague corn and many other crops.

Divergence, a St. Louis-based research and development company, is developing nematicides, as well as nematode-resistant plant genes, that can be delivered as valuable traits in the seed.

This research is intended to provide a safe method to protect plants from nematode pests. Current nematode control is accomplished by using chemicals that can have serious consequences to human and environmental health. In fact, many of these compounds are scheduled to be removed from the market. Through this collaboration, Divergence and NCGA hope to offer growers new, safe approaches to control nematodes in their crops.

"Experts estimate nematode damage causes reduction in corn yields of roughly 10 percent worldwide," said Gary Davis, chairman, NCGA Research and Business Development Action Team. "We expect this research has the potential to benefit the growers in three ways: first, it could lead to products for the control of an important crop pathogen during a time when so many control methods are being removed from the market; second, it has the potential to make farming much safer, both for farmers and their communities; and third, it should allow growers to produce crops more profitably.

"We are very excited to work with Divergence," said Davis. "Divergence has impressive products in development and a strong research platform to make many additional discoveries."

Derek Rapp, chief executive officer, Divergence, said, "The alliance between NCGA and Divergence is important because it has the potential to offer corn growers a safe and effective agent to control nematodes. Working with NCGA and its extensive base of growers will provide Divergence important links to the agricultural community, ensuring the products Divergence develops will be beneficial to customers.

"The combination of Divergence's science and NCGA's strong position in agriculture will position the two organizations to make a significant contribution to agriculture through a successful partnership," said Rapp.

Divergence, Inc. is a research and development company dedicated to the discovery of effective and ecologically sound strategies for the control of parasites and other pests. The company's initial focus is on parasitic nematodes, one of the world's major pest groups. Nematodes are roundworms that cause billions of dollars in damage annually to numerous crops, including corn, soybeans, cotton, strawberries, and bananas. Nematodes also cause widespread disease in animals, including infections such as heartworm in dogs and cats and intestinal worms in livestock. Nematode-induced human diseases include elephantiasis and African river blindness.

NCGA Encouraged By Introduction Of RFS Legislation

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Leaders of the National Corn Growers Association (NCGA) said they were encouraged by the introduction of a renewable fuels standard (RFS) bill in the Senate.

"Passing a national RFS this year is NCGA's top legislative priority," said NCGA President Fred Yoder.

The bipartisan legislation, introduced today by Sen. Tom Daschle, D-SD, includes a scheduled required use of ethanol in the nation's motor fuel supply that gradually increases over the next eight years. According to the schedule, a required use of 2.3 billion gallons of ethanol is set for next year. By 2012 the requirement would be at 5 billion gallons.

"These numbers, appropriated two years ago, do not reflect the tremendous growth in ethanol production," said Yoder. "NCGA will work with the Senate to increase the gallon requirement, particularly in the early years of the program.

NCGA advocates a national RFS because it would provide a stable demand for the use of ethanol, while reducing the nation's dependence on foreign oil.

"It is an important and timely piece of legislation," concluded Yoder. "With tensions swelling in Iraq, we need to focus on means for the United States to become more of an independent fuel producer."

The key provisions of the bill are identical to RFS legislation introduced in the 107th Congress. That measure, included in the Senate energy bill, survived three amendments to strike it but died when Congress adjourned.

March 15 Crop Insurance Deadline Nears

In 2002, record numbers of Pennsylvania producers purchased crop insurance as the foundation for managing their production risk exposures (table provides more details). The 14,000 policies provided protection on 27,775 farm crop units.

When the severe drought emerged last summer, these growers knew that they had protection based on their needs assessment at the time that they finalized their insurance protection decisions last spring.

It's estimated that the Pennsylvania crop insurance loss payments for 2002 will total about $60 million compared to $5.7 million of producer-paid premium. Pennsylvania producers would have received an additional $30 if Pennsylvania enrollment rates were equal to U.S. average.

Losses are expected to be paid on about half of the farm insurance units. Producers in 17 counties received loss payment in excess of one million dollars as of Feb. 10. They are Franklin, $6.2 million; Lancaster, $3.8 million; Berks, $4.1 million; Cumberland, $2.7 million; Adams, $2.5 million; Blair, $2.2 million; Huntingdon, $2 million; Lehigh, $2.0 million; York, $2 million; Erie, $1.5 million; Northampton, $1.5 million; Perry, $1.4 million; Lebanon, $1.2 million; Schuylkill, $1.6 million; Dauphin, $1.2 million; Northumberland, $1.2 million; and Bedford, $1.1 million.

Most crop insurance decisions for 2003 spring crops must be finalized by March 15. This includes choosing the insurance plan, the level of coverage, and other options which vary by crop. USDA and the commonwealth of Pennsylvania will again be providing premium cost shares equal to about 75 percent of the gross premium costs.

There is always a temptation to reduce coverage when there is good spring moisture, but it is important to remember that it takes good weather all summer long to grow good crops. Insurance plans work best when producers pick the plan and amount of protection to meet their economic needs, and stick with them year in and year out. Studies indicate that this approach often improves economic stability to the farming operations and can improve the inheritance of your grandchildren.

To get current quotes on insurance plans available, growers are encouraged to visit with their crop insurance agent before the March 15 deadline. A list of insurance agents is available at the FSA office or on the Internet at www.rma.usda.gov.

Join The Corn Growers Association

STATE COLLEGE (Centre Co.) — Joining the Pennsylvania Corn Growers Association (PCGA) is easier than ever. A one-year membership is just $30. You you can join online at https://gims.ncga.com/MEMBERNEW/Default.asp or simply fill out the membership form and send to our address.

PCGA is continuing the Membership Incentive Program (MIP) this year. The theme of the program is "Try Something New."

Take this opportunity to experiment when you choose your free bag of seed corn. This seed corn company sponsored program entitles any PCGA/NCGA corn grower, who plants at least five acres of corn with a 3-year new or renewed membership, to a free standard size bag of seed.

To participate, simply complete the membership form indicating the brand of seed corn you would like to try, along with your check for the 3-year membership. You will then receive a certificate for a free bag of seed from the sponsoring company of your choice, along with your membership card from NCGA.

In consultation with the local seed corn dealer, you make the ultimate decision about which hybrid you will receive from the company you have selected. PCGA will send the names and addresses by brand chosen to the appropriate seed corn company's statewide contact person and they will contact you.

In addition, you'll be joining thousands of other growers across the country who are showing their support for the corn industry. Locally, you'll be supporting PCGA's activities such as Corn Talk, our corn or crops conference, and local corn promotion activities.

Membership Program Awards Prizes For Recruiters

Now you can help the PCGA get new members and win some valuable prizes.

The PCGA is participating in a new membership program sponsored by NCGA and Syngenta to reward folks who recruit members for our association. To qualify, you need to recruit five new members in one of the next three months.

Prizes will be awarded to the top recruiters who have recruited a minimum of five new members in Pennsylvania for each month. In January, the prize will be a Palm Pilot. In February, the prize will be a $300 gift certificate to Sears. In March, the prize will be a gourmet ham plus a $100 gift certificate for groceries at a local supermarket.

To participate, make copies of the PCGA membership form in Corn Talk. Ask folks to complete the membership form and put your name on the Recruiter line on the bottom, and then send the form to the PCGA office. Or they can join online (https://gims.ncga.com/MEMBERNEW/Default.asp) and enter your name in the appropriate line on the application. We'll keep a record of the awards and send the prize to the qualifying recruiter at the end of the month.

NCGA Pleased Disaster Aid May Finally Reach Farmers

WASHINGTON, D.C. — National Corn Growers Association (NCGA) President Fred Yoder said the organization is pleased Congress is sending a $3.1 billion disaster aid measure to the floor. Yet Yoder also expressed deep concerns about the source of funds being tapped to pay for the proposal.

"We are glad Congress is providing funds for farmers impacted by drought and floods," said Yoder. "But we are very disappointed they offset it with money from the Conservation Title of the farm bill."

NCGA had strongly supported the savings offsets approved by the Senate last month as a more equitable method. To stay within a FY 03 appropriations spending cap of $390 billion, the Senate earlier approved a 2.9 percent across-the-board cut to fund agriculture disaster assistance and increases in Medicare payments.

Yoder also said NCGA is troubled Congress did not reform the method of delivering disaster aid to better help farmers cope with future adverse weather conditions. "We need to put into place a mechanism that addresses disasters in a far more effective way without having the usual fight over funding and delivery of funds," said Yoder. "Changes also must be made to ensure disaster programs treat crop insurance participants more fairly."

Yoder said NCGA will continue to advocate for such a measure. Last fall, Rep. Sam Graves (R-Mo.) introduced a bill backed by NCGA, the Companion Disaster Assistance Program Act. Modeled after the private companion hail insurance policy, Graves' legislation would deliver graduated disaster payments to cover part of the deductible in federal crop insurance contracts and that vary with the degree of losses.

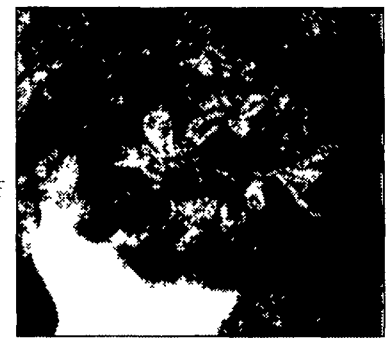
Cimarron SR ALFALFA

Top Forage Quality
Cimarron SR produces larger leaves than other alfalfa varieties (See photo right.) And it holds its leaves better in the field and in the baling process. The result is a leafier hay with higher protein and TDN. Break open a bale of Cimarron hay, and you can see the difference.



High Yields - Long Stand Life
Cimarron SR is producing excellent yields in the Penn State trials. And unlike other alfalfa varieties Cimarron SR was bred on the East Coast, so it stands up well under the difficulties of Eastern conditions. You can count on Cimarron SR for long stand life and top productivity.

Sclerotinia Resistance
Sclerotinia crown rot is a significant problem for alfalfa growers on the East Coast. Cimarron SR provides the protection against sclerotinia that growers need.

Weevil Tolerance
Cimarron SR's unique alfalfa weevil tolerance reduces weevil damage by 50%. In a heavy infestation spraying can be cut in half. In lighter infestations, spraying can be avoided altogether.

President's Message

Guy Wagner
President PCGA

The first thing I'd like to do is to apologize to everyone for missing the. Feb 7 Corn and Soybean Conference.

I've been having knee trouble for years and finally decided to do something about it. When I got scheduled for surgery Jan. 31, the first thing I asked the doctor was, "Will I be OK for Feb. 7?" He said, "that shouldn't be a problem."

How wrong he was!

I'm writing this Feb. 14 and still couldn't do it!

I talked to Greg Roth the Monday after the conference and he said that it went very well. Again, I'm sorry I wasn't able to attend, but I'd like to thank everyone who did. I hope that everyone who attended was able to take something positive home with them.

As you are reading this, Dr. Roth and I should be on our way home from the Commodity Classic. I'm excited that PCGA is finally going to be represented and I hope that we continue to work with NCGA in the future.

By the time everyone is reading this, spring should be right around the corner. I've been thinking that it will be especially welcome this year. I know I'm ready!

I'd like to wish everyone a great and safe 2003 growing season. Good luck to all.

Corn Planter Maintenance

Ryan Hockensmith
Lawrence County

Winter is the time to get your planter (and drill) ready for next year's season.

You can make a lot of money by doing this maintenance early, whereas waiting until the last minute with repairs can easily lead to yield losses of five percent or more because of delayed planting.

On the other hand, if your planter is not working right, you can expect a host of problems that will reduce yields. In no-till, good planter performance is even more crucial than in tilled fields because of the high penetration resistance, high amounts of crop residue at the soil surface, and rough soil surface.

Inadequate planting will result in uneven seed depth placement, inaccurate plant spacing, and/or open seed trenches.

Hair pinning is common if coulters and row cleaners don't work properly. Here are some tips to prepare your planter for the '03 season.

1. Level planter. A level planter is essential for accurate seed depth placement. By placing a level below the tongue you can easily check if it is horizontally aligned.

If you notice that the unit is either hanging back- or forwards, you need to lift or lower the tractor drawbar or adjust the clevis on the planter tongue.

The planter frame and planter units should also be level. Planter leveling should be done with full planter and fertilizer boxes.

2. Planter unit alignment. Unit alignment is essential for accurate seeding depth and uniform row spacing. Look across your planter units from the side.

Are they all at the same height? If one unit is either up or down compared to the others, it needs some work.

A common problem is that some bolts are loose. You should not be able to easily lift up your unit. The bolts that control the up and down movement and sideway movement should be very tight.

Washers may need to be switched from in- to outside or vice-versa.

3. Seed opener disks. If opener disks are worn too much, soil will fall in the opened slot and you lose seed depth control. The seed slot will form a "W" instead of a "V" slot.

If they have worn too much (see operator's manual), they need replacement. On a John Deere 7000, for example, disks should at least have a diameter of 13.5 inches (new disks have a 15-inch diameter).

Stick two business cards between the openers and move them as close together as possible.

The space between them should be 3 inches or more, depending on your planter type. Remove dirt that has accumulated between opener disks.

4. Coulters. Coulters in front of the double disk opener serve to cut crop residue and loosen some soil.

The coulter should not run deeper than the double disk opener, or you may loose seed depth control.

Check the diameter of the coulters, and replace them if needed. You should adjust the depth of worn coulters that are still usable (there are some bolts that allow you to do this).

5. Firming wheels. Check the pressure on the firming wheels.

The downward pressure should be adequate to close the seed trench without compacting soil above the seed (check operator manual). Replace worn or broken firming wheels.

6. Depth wheels. Depth wheels should run tight against the double-disks or soil may accumulate between them. Washers or adjusting bolts are used to obtain the desired result.

7. Depth of seed placement. Place the planter on a concrete floor to measure the difference between the bottom of the depth wheels and double-disk opener, and adjust to the desired depth.

8. Alignment of individual components. Look down each unit, or better, take a rope and pull it straight from the front coulter to the back press wheels. The firming wheels, slot openers, and coulters should all be in line.

9. Wear on chains and sprockets. Check the chains that drive the meters and their sprockets. If they are worn too much they need to be replaced. Excessive wearing of these parts will cause skips and doubles.

10. Clean metering units. Take metering units apart. Remove dirt and clean the hood with soapy water (no kerosene, diesel or oil should ever be used in metering units!).

Check for broken fingers in a finger-pickup meter, check the brush that wipes off excess seeds, and see if a groove has formed in the chromium house of the metering unit.

If the groove becomes large, and if brushes wear, you have a greater likelihood of doubles. Brushes need to be replaced at least every other year.

11. Elevator belt in metering unit. The belt (in finger pick-up meters) should be flexible, not have cracks in it, and should be clean. Clean with soapy water and let it dry before putting it back in.

Put the metering unit back together. The rubber belt should be placed back in the right direction, or your meter will malfunction.

You can lubricate with graphite (no oil or WD-40). The cap that holds the fingers should be tightened to the appropriate torque.

12. Calibrate meter. It is highly recommended to take your finger pick-up metering unit to the dealer to have it calibrated.

Take a bag of your own seed with you, and give him the correct speed at which you'll be driving.

13. Vacuum/air units. If you have a vacuum or air meter, check for leaks and appropriate vacuum or air pressure.

14. Check your fertilizer unit. Starter fertilizer coulters (if used) need to be 2 inches away from the double-disk opener. Hang a bucket below the tube of the unit, and do a test run of 175 feet in the field.

Weigh the fertilizer in the bucket, multiply by 100, and you have the fertilizer you'll put on in pounds per acre (at 30" row spacing). Adjust as needed.

Corn Maze Tips

Don Watts
Newtown Graphics
Corn Maze Designs

Thinking of having a corn maze event at your farm? It's a growing trend for farms to supplement their incomes with a corn maze. If you think it might be right for you, here are some tips for a successful event.

Location is important. Ideally, your corn maze should be near a major highway or within a short drive from a populated area. Consider where your potential customers will be coming from and how far they'll have to travel.

A location near a main road is also helpful with advertising. You can erect signs on your own property that will reach your potential customers on a daily basis.

Size matters. A maze about 4 to 7 acres in size is ideal. I've heard many complaints from customers who've become frustrated after being lost in an over-sized maze for too long a time under the blistering hot sun.

Bigger is not always better, especially for older and very young maze-go'ers. You might want to make a small "kids maze" next to your main corn maze.

Choosing a corn maze designer depends on your budget and how much work you're willing to do yourself. There are several good corn maze design firms who will do all the work for you, but expect to pay about $5,000 to $7,000 for their services. Using a designer who lets you do most of the work will usually cost under $2,000.

If you need ideas for a design, farm animals and equipment, fruits and vegetables, state or local icons, and geometric designs are good choices.

Logos or mascots from local schools will draw the students and their families. Patriotic designs are very popular.

Be sure your parking area is a short walk from the maze. As an alternative, provide hayrides to the maze field. Your customers will enjoy the experience.

Consider renting an inflatable "moon-bounce" for kids or having pony rides.

Some other draws are face painting, food concessions, and pumpkin and gourd sales. Many of your customers will be looking to enjoy the whole "farm" experience. For more ideas, you might want to visit other corn mazes to see them in operation.

Always check local ordinances and confer with your insurance agent before holding an event on your property.

A corn maze is a great way for local residents to see farms in action. And of course, the additional income is always welcome.

Fall might seem like a long way off, but now is the time to start planning for a successful corn maze.

— NCGA Leadership Academy Update —

Jeffery Werner
Vice President, PCGA

This past year I participated in two NCGA Leadership Academies. These were professionally conducted, first-class events sponsored by the National Corn Growers Association and Syngenta. The purposes of the academies were to develop improved and new leadership and to teach effective lobbying skills.

The first event I attended was conducted Aug. 21-24 in Greensboro, N.C. Twenty farmers from around the nation participated. The organizers were especially excited to have a representative from Pennsylvania attend. Many years have passed since Pennsylvania was represented. Grant Troop was the last in recent memory. In the Midwest there are local county grower's associations that take turns selecting attendees. In Pennsylvania there is only one state organization.

Leadership personnel and workshop leaders were provided by NCGA, the Soybean Association, and Syngenta. The following areas were covered: association leadership, lunch etiquette, building presentation skills, thinking in the future tense, media training, and persuasion skill. There was also a tour of Syngenta and their research facility.

On Jan. 26-28, I met with the same group of corn growers in Washington, D.C. There we were briefed again on the important issues facing growers today. A lobbyist panel consisting of the National Pork Producers Council, American Soybean Association, National Cattlemen's Beef Association, National Farmers Union, and the American Farm Bureau Federation made a presentation. Their topic was when everyone works together, great things can be accomplished legislatively.

Even though Pennsylvania is a relatively small corn-producing state, it is important to maintain a rapport with our Congressmen. I visited with Senator Santorum's legislative correspondent, Christopher Walters. I also met with Senator Specter's aide, Michael Oscar. Lastly I met with Rep. Tim Holden, who is a member of the House Agricultural Committee. This conversation was followed by a productive discussion with Nona Darrell, the senior legislative assistant to Pennsylvania Rep. Holden.

All visits were productive and included a discussion of the Energy Bill, the renewable fuel standard (RFS), and our part in supplying dependable, clean, and economical fuel. Unfortunately, the majority of the groups I visited with suggested that an approved Energy Bill would not be forthcoming this year.

Also discussed was disaster assistance. The NCGA believes that aid should be targeted to those who had the greatest loss and not spread uniformly whenever there is regional loss. Congress is considering a $3.1 billion Disaster Aid Package. President Bush is opposed to the package.

Transportation is also an important issue for farmers that was discussed. The outdated and controversial locks and dams on the Upper Mississippi Basin cost American farmers lost sales because of increased freight costs. A study is being done on the impact of the Jones Act. Currently foreign grains are being imported into some states, most noticeably North Carolina, because of economic factors. The feeling is that the U.S. is not the low-cost supplier because of noncompetitive freight systems. The study will determine if there is an American shipping industry left to protect. Other factors also come into play in this situation.

The academies were well worth the investment by NCGA and the corn industry. Whenever there is an opportunity for positive-minded farmers who are interested in improving the lot of all farmers, I consider it time well spent.
